

Factors to consider when comparing what I say to my healthcare records:

The following are liabilities for Wells Fargo-

- My PTSD
- My symptoms of PTSD
- My pain and suffering
- My impairment and loss of ability to produce an income
- The crimes and civil law violations that have occurred, specifically Wells Fargo's involvement in these crimes and civil law violations.

Then you have my mental health. Given that Wells Fargo has attempted to portray my belief that this privacy violation occurred as a symptom of my mental health condition, and given that (as you will see) they, along with Atrium Health are attempting to portray my belief in that these crimes occurred in the same light, you can say the following-

- Portraying me to have mental illness symptoms is in Wells Fargo's favor.
- Making statements that would suggest that I have mental illness symptoms is in Wells Fargo's favor.
- Avoiding making statements that I am mentally well is in Wells Fargo's Favor.
- Making statements that I am mentally well is NOT in Wells Fargo's favor.
- Giving my rational reasons for believing what I believe is NOT in Wells Fargo's favor.
- Showing evidence or presenting evidence for the claims that I make is NOT in Wells Fargo's favor
