I will do whatever it takes

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>

In normal times, it's best to tell the raw, uncensored truth. I think this way and I would imagine that you think this way too. In this situation, however, it seems like we want to go about this a different way.

All I'm trying to do is end my suffering and save my life. The ends justify the means. If you need me to say that my belief about what has occurred is a "delusion" resulting from my mental health condition, I will do it.

All that care about is my new life in Charlotte and I need this hellish stress that is on me to relent. My word is good. Whoever helps me is whose side I'm on. If it is Wells Fargo, then I'm on Wells Fargo's side. Same for you. I understand that you have limitations and constraints, although I don't know what all of them are. I ask you to do what is right by me. I will do whatever you need me to.
