please help me

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>

They do not appear to be writing me any more adderall until my appointment on September 1st.

This is my punishment, I suppose, for bringing this up with atrium. I am very sorry but I cannot control myself, because of my suffering. You do not realize how profoundly I suffer. I am injured to an extreme degree. It may be the case that I am a 1 in 100,000 category for ptsd severity.

I am contemplating going to the inpatient unit on Billingsly road. I am not fit to be in the emergency room upstairs. I need to go to observation.

I need you very badly to help me. If I am made right here, it will work out for everyone. I can keep secrets and I will do whatever you need me to. There is no reason for anyone to believe what I have claimed anyways.

If I am made right and do not have to face the end of my life every minute of every day, I will be much better able to control myself.

I am willing to be institutionalized for life, if I can get any amount of comfort at all. If I could get sent to some facility, and have all my expenses for food, etc. paid for, and also get a disability check, that would be enough. I would just need to be able to have books, my iPad, my iPhone, and be able to use my computer. I would also need to be able to sleep and wake when I want, and have my diet and my eating times be up to me. I would like it to be a replica of my apt in Charlotte as much as possible. I am not fit to go out to places.

This may sound insane and I may sound like I'm asking for something special for me. On the former, this is an alternative to the end of my life (as I or anyone else knows it). On the latter, I have endured an extremely bad set of events and these events have injured me very extremely. There are roadblocks to me getting justice, and this isn't fair to me. I have heard of people who are a liability for Washington getting a room to stay in at the White House, for instance. I need an outcome that is good for me too.

Clint Williams
