I'm sorry

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>, civil.feedback@usdoj.gov

I keep sending you emails and audios where I'm a bastard to you. I'm sorry for that. I just get angry over your despicable conduct and your criminally abusing me when I'm disabled. This situation isn't going anywhere, I'm very sorry to say. You do not get how profoundly damaged that I am. I don't think that you do.

It would be nice, for your purposes, if I would just take one for the team. I can't do that. It isn't possible. I am living in too much misery and face too much hardship. I will be homeless one day, if I don't get help. My soul has been crushed by this, too, and I have lost everything that I cared about the most.

I am going to get my medication adjusted on my next appointment. That may help me some. There is no magic fix, though. This bank ought to face justice. Given that it will not do that, it should at least make it right with me.

Your behavior has been very hurtful and you've been extremely cruel. The Federal Reserve is also bigoted and their bigotry and yours is despicable. You judge a kindhearted man on something that you do not understand and that is none of your business. At the same time, you seem to not judge this bank at all, for behavior that is very much within their control.
