I'm not your enemy

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>, civil.feedback@usdoj.gov

This idea, that I'm the enemy because Wells Fargo victimized me or that I'm the enemy because you've victimized me is upside down, backwards, and inside out. Im not the enemy I am the victim.

I was just watching a 10 minute cnbc clip about Wells Fargo. What it reminded me of is how bad I hate what is happening to this bank. It's absolutely terrible. I feel bad at times, for going on the aggressive. Wells Fargo just wants to fix its business and the people there face all kinds of challenges. Everyone's life is hard, at least from their perspective.

You say that you protect the interests of the United States. That is part of your stated goal. It seems that you are of the opinion that the interests of Wells Fargo are the interests of the United States. Wells Fargo has the potential to benefit the United States. It already does and it has for a long time. Businesses get their capital. People get a home. People have the conveniences that come from having a bank account.

What you must realize is that the interests of Wells Fargo and the interests of everyone else in this country only line up to a certain extent. There are plenty of examples of times when the interests of Wells Fargo are counter to the interests of others. Conflicts of interest define our lives in this country. They are to be found everywhere.

Your other goal is to uphold the rule of law. Life does funny things to us, and it seems right up the alley of the way things go that the American economy, and therefore America itself, depends on the prolonged impunity of what looks to be among the most criminal enterprises in the history of the world, if you exclude organized crime.

With this situation with me, you are just kicking the can. We've got a big problem with this bank. I gave you the perfect opportunity to do something about it. I knew from fairly early on that this might run into a snafu with the economy. By this I mean we might have a big obstacle that prevents any sort of criminal prosecution of any of these people. What I expected, though, was for you to share my view that this situation just can't be. This isn't doable, to have a bank that is allowed to mercilessly abuse innocent people with no consequence.

This is the type of situation that brings you back to the drawing board. We've got to find some third option, and we've got to do something to fix this situation. That's the attitude that I expected.

You will have the exact same problem after me. You will still have a bank that is allowed to mercilessly abuse people with no consequence. It's most likely going to be that much more pumped up. The crimes will get more vicious, as the bank's self-perception of being above the law is reinforced over and over.

I sent you the thing about the wire fraud victim. Odds are at least 80% that a Wells Fargo employee or multiple Wells Fargo employees were involved. You do nothing about it. An innocent woman who can barely buy groceries is made another victim who will not be made whole. She paid the price for this bank's conduct.

Then there is the lady who had the judge paid off in her foreclosure case. This is another one where we have a 70% or 80% chance, minimum, that Wells Fargo was involved in this apparent crime. This happened subsequent to me submitting my complaint. They're still committing crimes right under your nose, even after all of this.

I send you audios where I curse you out and beat you to death. I will no longer apologize for those. This is despite the fact that if I could prevent myself from saying so many curse words, I would. I just turn on my computer and think out loud.

I will not let this bank get away with this cruel murder of me. I will make sure that you and them have to answer for who you've done. Maybe I'm wrong for doing this. I don't see how.

It's my bedtime.

Clint Williams
