I continue to suffer and I do not like the life I have before me

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>, civil.feedback@usdoj.gov

In that last email, I was probably inaccurate in saying that the days you don't get an email I'm doing better. That is true for a lot of the days but is likely not true of some others. I suffer every single day. We are past the point of no return. I'm not sure how long we have been past that point. What I mean is that I will never have a life that I am happy about, no matter what happens. I have been damaged too severely and my sense of self has been crushed. My physical health is also terrible and getting worse. This is just as I predicted. In July and August 2021, I knew that I would have premature health problems. I also felt it extremely likely that I die prematurely from natural causes. We will see if that comes to pass.

The lesson that I have learned here, you may be tempted to say is something like "don't fight Wells Fargo", but is actually "don't go near Wells Fargo." You've got people acting recklessly and carelessly in a very fragile world. Their actions are designed to break something, and it's against the rules for them to pay the price for their own conduct. So what gets you broken is everything they come into contact with, except themselves and their own circumstances. I had no choice but to fight them. I had to have a life and I had to have something in life besides nothing, and their crimes left me disabled and permanently injured.

I have this powerful and recurring drive to learn and master stuff and get good at stuff and advance my cause and advance my life, and I cannot do it. I am handicapped and that ability is gone. It is so painful. The way this drive will not go away has an effect of renewing my sense of loss every day, usually over and over again. My soul is crushed 1,000x a day, as I grieve for and long to be the person that I used to be.
