Re: This situation

I accidentally hit send. The idea that anything other than this criminal abuse caused my PTSD is absurd. Any expert you have who is giving you that opinion is doing so for some odd reason, the primary suspects being that he/she is getting paid to do so, or the process has been designed to get the outcome that you want.

You have botched this whole thing. None of what you hoped to gain by running this coverup is likely going to be accomplished by the time that all is said and done. In the most extreme case, just maybe you score a few points. The odds are overwhelming that you get found out. If I weren't so ill, almost certainly you would have already been found out. It's an uphill battle for me, because of the credibility problem created by prejudice against me for my health condition, but I'm pretty good at this and I learn something on every iteration. I move at a snails pace, but over time I get stuff done.

I created a web portal that had everything you would need, just about. All of this nonsense about my hospital stay at 18, I had 6 or 7 videos that explained it in depth. I told a very complete story in these videos and I included videos to further explain things. Any questions you had, I could have rounded up an answer in not too much time at all.

You wouldn't get found out if I would just drop this issue, but I'm sorry, I can't do that. I will not accept this fate, where I am murdered because I asked Wells Fargo to have a conversation, and Wells Fargo gets away with it Scott free. Ditto for allowing myself to be defamed after I am dead. Telling the full story of my life to the public is likely to be necessary, to address the situation that has been created. Telling the full story of my life to the public is the end of me. It is a horrifying thought, the pain that I will live in as a result. The end of me it may be, my life is extremely defensible. I am not sure that many people have lived a more defensible life. I am disabled; I am extremely ill, and I will have to put up a fight, but I will win in the end. The effort that I have put into doing what is right, over so many decades, has rigged that game in my favor. It will be a nightmare and I don't look forward to it, but it's better than the alternative.

So you get nothing, and I will have suffered and lost everything for no reason. You have no defensible reason but even your indefensible reasons will fail to pan out. I was the answer to every problem that this bank had. They just didn't see it. Part of the reason they didn't see it is because they didn't bother looking; they don't care.

There is nothing in the work that is done in this bank, at any location, that is a total mystery to me. I know about finance. I know about accounting. I know about sales. I know about marketing. I know about technology. For their ethical problems, there is likely no human being on the face of the earth who has thought longer or harder about what it means to do right than me. No one has engaged in this exercise from the position that I did either. My desire to do right in life required me to overcome everything. It even required me to overcome the blood that runs in my veins.

I will continue later.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
