Re: Who do you think you are fighting

If you think you have a single point in your favor, you are very badly and sadly mistaken. I picture it as being probable that you think you've got a lot of points in your favor. One thing that can cause this is you losing your mind completely. This whole situation is such a shit show, is so unnecessary, should have never happened, and involves all kinds of ridiculous crimes, foolish mistakes, and despicable conduct on the part of Wells Fargo and the Justice Department. This is very hard to deal with for you, I would imagine.

The reality of what has happened is so threatening to your sense of self, to the way that you wish to see yourself, and to the way that you want others to see you, that it can become impossible to cope with. When reality becomes too much to cope with, what people do is we start to abandon reality and reach for things that are not there.

So that's one thing, you wish to defend yourself, and the best (and probably only) way to do that is to take shots and me or make me out to be the bad guy. I don't have a complete list of things that you might think or say here, but without me there to hear your criticisms in real time and to give you corrective feedback, this whole process can run wild and have you leaving the planet.

The most likely of all the shots you could take at me, I think, is some claim that I'm a "psychopath." I can picture it being possible that you have corralled a bunch of "experts", perhaps together with one of the people from the mountains who hates me with a passion, and you have compared notes, viewed my illegally obtained healthcare records, listened to my audios, analyzed my behavior thoroughly, and drawn some very confident conclusions. I can picture a chorus of people confirming that this is exactly the case. I'm a clear cut psychopath. If the claim isn't that I'm a psychopath, then replace that word with whatever you have described me as.

If this has occurred, this is a fruitcake process that you've engaged in. Anyone who says that I'm a psychopath is a fruitcake. If I were allowed to participate in this process, I could have stopped you cold before you even got started. I could have done so definitively and in a way that none of your experts would contend with. Even if they wanted to, the force of my reasoning and the blatant evidence I have against whatever they try to say would force them to give up. I am so extremely far from a psychopath. Psychopaths are cold blooded and I am kindhearted. Psychopaths lie and I am compulsively and brutally honest. I'd have to hear what you claim but you're just toast in any debate you have with me about this.

Another thing I think is possible is that in all of these audios I send you, I have said all sorts of things and I often also have an arrogant attitude, speak in a domineering way

I'm going to have to continue this later. I'm getting tired. My decision to work for this bank has cost me all my hopes and my dreams and all the happiness that I would have had in life, and it is going to cost me my life. My life was fragile and I needed to work for a business that exercised care and played by the rules. If I know the rules, I can protect my fragile life as long as people follow the rules. This is exactly what I did for so long, until they invaded my privacy. Then, I merely ask to have a conversation, at no cost to anyone, after wailing in tears over what these people had done to me. For this, I am murdered. I am hit with an instantaneous, brutal massacre that causes me to live in horrific pain for years and destroys the life I worked so hard to build.

Things have gotten so bad for me as of now, that there is little point in trying to settle with you. If I did, what I want at this point is to get 10 billion dollars, so that I can move to Switzerland and write a book about my life and about what a bunch of pieces of shit you are. I'll give my money away. A lot of it would go to my new friend that I met online. I do not want to live at all. I want to help my new friend and her family, and I want to write 1 book, then if I've still got energy, another, then maybe 1 more after that. After that, my work is done, and I will say goodbye to this world and good riddance to the rotten thugs at United States of America.

I might die any day. These problems with my heart are very bad. I can tell by the way that I feel that I am in very bad physical condition. I am so weak. I've been crying on and off for hours, over how bad things have gotten and how most likely I am beyond the point where I can be repaired. My body and my heart muscle were fried by the stress that I was under, as I beg the doj for help, and as the doj responds by mercilessly abusing me and having my healthcare records falsified, so that I can't even get disability benefits. Disability benefits would have saved my life.
