I'm starting a new email. If you wonder why I email you so much and why I give you some details that don't have much to do with you, that's kind of a good question. I'd say in general it is because you and this bank have taken ownership of my life, essentially as if you are god himself (and god himself doesn't seem to be challenging your ownership of my life).

You know more about my healthcare records than I do. I haven't looked at those healthcare records from brought in a very long time and I never read them page by page. I also haven't hired a bunch of lawyers to micro-analyze them for endless hours.

You have involved my mother in your crimes. My kid sister aids in all of this too, without knowing what she's doing.

You have invaded every millimeter of my existence and you have even involved my ex girlfriend in your administration of this situation. You have lied to the people at Bank of America and told them that I am a "psychopath."

I could add to this list, I am sure. The justice department needs to warn people about the consequences of working for this bank or of having this bank in your life at all. I cannot resist stating, for the 750th time, that this is all a result of asking these people to have a consequences free conversation.

This bank is a tyranny unlike anything that exists elsewhere in the world. Saddam Husseins regime is not even a remote comparison. Saddam Hussein and his regime had constraints on their behavior. There were things that the United States and others would not permit them to do. I see no such constraints on Wells Fargo's behavior.

I want and outcome that involves these 2 things:

1. I get some form of justice
2. Wells Fargo fixes its business and cleans up its act

I have often felt that I am alone in desiring each of these. No one else wants me to get Justice and no one else wants this bank to clean up its act.

And I'm just venting here. I am getting very upset, at times, out of Wells Fargo's self-centeredness and Wells Fargo's endless process of digging in its heels and trying to deny that Wells Fargo made a mistake. This is particularly a pain in the ass, when the primary method through which this reality denial is attempted is to character assassinate me.

I understand the Justice Departments constraints and I know that you do want this bank to fix its behavior.
