"In particular, I want to avoid any shit storm banking failure panic, end of the world, etc. outcomes. I don't want any such thing to ever cross anyone's mind"

- what I'm saying here is I don't want there to be any talks about this or for it to cross anyone's mind as a credible threat. I want to frame this in some way where that is not even part of the picture. You will have some politicians and commentators making remarks about the bank ought to be broken up, prosecuted, shut down, etc. but such talk does not equate to a credible threat that it will happen in the minds of the public.

My approach is relevant, because I have everything that I need to knock the hell out of this bank. These people have compounded their problem over and over, by piling rotten conduct on top of more rotten conduct for literally years.

If their plan is to character assassinate me, good luck to them. They're going to need it and it's not going to help them.

I started this fight as dramatically the good guy and they started this fight as dramatically the bad guy. Over time, I have become even more dramatically so and so have they.

What they have done is so merciless and so cruel, and so totally not warranted, that they have no prayer. The shots that they take at my exemplary life will bounce right back and hit them, themselves, with 1,000x the force. The world will hate them and the world will cry with me, when they learn of my life and of my struggle.

I'm not telling you this as a threat or for the purposes of boasting, but just to point out that the actual reality of this situation is one that is likely to trigger a shit storm and a hoo rah that has no parallel in recent history. The only thing that will stop that is if I express wishes to the contrary.

It's not that I'm that important. It's not that people will abandon the self-focus that is part of ordinary human nature. It is that people are human and they have a heart and they have decency, and my story is very compelling. The life I have lived is an accomplishment in itself, and people will recognize that accomplishment the same way that they recognize any other accomplishment.

If the people at Wells Fargo think that the details of my life are going to cause sympathy for *them*, they are completely out of their minds and they've got it backwards 180 degrees. The last thing on earth they would do, if they had the least bit of sanity, would be to bring attention to my life.
