" You will have some politicians and commentators making remarks about the bank ought to be broken up, prosecuted, shut down, etc"

-if I decide to put this in the media, which is what is most likely going to happen, I'm sure they will contact you before they publish anything. It may be that they accommodate a timed release, due to the seriousness of what has happened. What I am saying is they might be willing to let you announce this before they do, and time it in such a way as to prevent a any kind of chaos.

I have no idea how the hell that we are going to explain it to the public that Wells Fargo had me kidnapped. The items subsequent to that are easier to explain, even though it is ruthless cruelty from start to finish. And I mean I've got a list of rotten conduct that is god knows how long. They've not gotten away with anything that I'm aware of. There are things that I've never mentioned. I've lost track. I'm on the fence, just barely, if they had someone monitoring me at my apartment in Charlotte. Trying to think of other on the fence stuff.

But back to the topic of how we explain this and the calls to have the bank prosecuted, if they come, we could reference my handicap and how it would be enormously difficult for me to endure a trial like that. To be honest, I don't think that I could do it. I am so extremely impaired that I find it overwhelming to get items off the shelf from the refrigerator. I can't stand it when people talk to me at unplanned times. My mother has a bad habit of doing this and it causes me terrible distress. I yelled at her the other morning for doing this. It would also potentially be dangerous for the person who cross examines me. I am extraordinarily sensitive to how people treat me and I become hostile and start to have impulses to be violent over what seems like nothing to others.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
