I need to get a neurologist to vet my neurological impairment and vet the need to up my adderall to 60 mg. My provider is on board with going to 40, if my blood pressure comes down from 89. I take a medication for EPS that also lowers my blood pressure. It is a PRN, or whatever that is called. I am prescribed 2 a day. I have very often only taken one and probably sometimes not taken even one a day. I've been taking 2 a day for weeks now, and it puts my blood pressure at around 79. It also sedates the hell out of me when I take it twice a day.

That's more evidence of my heart being fried. I had near perfect blood pressure for years and very consistently at atrium when they measured it. Then in February or so of 2021, I started having heart problems. Then my body was fried in July and August of that same year. And we have the evidence of it, that I am bordering on mid level hypertension without the aid of a beta blocker that I wasn't previously prescribed. My numerator is jacked up too. It pushes towards 129 to 133, without my medication.
