You can forget this ending well. You're murderers and you don't give a shit about me, but it might still bum you out if I go overseas and die. There is nothing that can guarantee this outcome won't occur, even if I get $50 billion and the people involved are made to pay like hell.

What would be fair for me would be $10 billion settlement and these people being dealt a devastating blow in life. They might not have to go to prison, but I want them fined and to have their compensation for participating in this taken back on top of that, and I want them banned from the banking industry.

I hate that this situation is such a pain, but I didn't do any of it. It sounds crazy to me, thinking of what is at stake, to stop the whole world just for the sake of one person. That's what we're dealing with though, when a bank this big goes off of the rails like this. We pick between stopping the whole world for just one person or this bank having a license to any and everything it wants to anyone. It has done any and everything it wants to a lot of people. I have met some of these people, and god knows how many there are that I haven't met. It's a much simpler solution for the people at this bank to behave ethically and to run their business properly. This mess of a situation that are in is a result of *their* conduct.

If I get what's fair to me, then I'll be satisfied. If I get something like the much less figures that I've mentioned, I will be sort of happy but will not be able to say that I have gotten Justice. It will also murder my soul. There may come a time when I have mercy on you, in my judgements, and am grateful for what I got. If I get totally railroaded here, I won't be the first person to suffer that fate. So in that sense, I should count myself lucky with anything more than getting totally railroaded. There are all kinds of factors at play here, though, that make my situation very different.
