In re Wells Fargo's reverse engineered bullshit narrative, I mentioned to my new psychologist how I said those foul and disturbing things when I was hospitalized at age 18. I can remember what she said almost verbatim. It went like this-

"Yeah, I've seen people in a drug induced psychosis, and it's not something you can hold against them. It's like an intrusive thought or like gibberish...it's not like it's the truth coming out of them. It's like something just causes them to say... like...the worst thing that they could say."

I've yet to meet a sufficiently qualified and experienced psychologist who isn't familiar with things like this. No less than 100% for whom I have an opinion think it's totally harmless.

These people just make shit up as they go along. If you cannot see how ridiculous this is, by this time, I don't know what's wrong with you.

I dare you to expose your fantasy world to sunlight. Tell the public the truth about everything you know, and then give them this bullshit spiel about "we saw signs that he might be dangerous." You will watch your fantasy world melt like ice cream.

You go around disparaging me, trying to make me out as the ultimate snake in the grass, when it is you that is hiding and me that is trying to get the entire world's attention on the situation. It's got to be hell to try to maintain your ridiculous illusions. You need to just give this shit up. It will be easier on your psyche.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
