"I am much, much less given to this than others. I believe that it is partly due to my being autistic. I have a profound impairment in my intuition. It is an impairment that just happens to double as a gift. The fact that my intuition malfunctions seems to get in the way of me thinking that I understand something that I do not."

- I don't want to make myself out to be exempt from human frailties. I make this mistake just like other people do. It just seems to me like it is something I do far less often. I do it plenty enough to fall far short of perfection, I miss that mark to an extreme degree.

I've got a tinge or maybe two tinges of narcissism in my personality makeup. I've noticed this for a while now. It is sub clinical and harmless. And then again, maybe I don't. I have trouble figuring that one out too. Karen Crane didn't think I was narcissistic at all and the personality tests I took didn't come back that way. I can be very certain of myself at times, but my self-image can also be very flexible. I get confused about how I am as a person. It is part of my fathers nature that I inherited. That's the big piece there.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
