You're probably noticing how I seem to be doing exceptionally well, relative to how I usually am. This is especially in terms of getting things done. My psychiatrist upped my adderall this last time. It is what helps me the most, as I've said a million times. It's at 40 mg. I'm doing the best I've ever done, since I became disabled. I'm still extremely handicapped, but I'm better about to work on my computer and do things on it. It has crud on it and I've ordered a cleaning kit. My computer is one of the nicest things that I've ever owned. It is the nicest computer for sure. It's up there with my pool table.

Everything I own, including most of my books, that I stored in my building in TN has been stolen. This is terrible, but it puts my assets way down there. If I still had all of my property from before, this computer would have put me in a fix, in terms of if a creditor sues me. It would have put me above the threshold of what I can exempt. It would make me a target too. I am paying everything, I just worry about some of these people that have charged me off coming back, now that I've got money to pay the others. I'm at a deficit already.

Clint Williams
