This is my buddy. Her name is Blackie. She sleeps on the hard kitchen floor that is in front of my bedroom. Before I got disability, she slept on the couch, which is much more comfortable and is her favorite place.

Why does she sleep on this hard, uncomfortable floor now? Because it is in front of my room and she loves me. I feed her snacks all day long. I feed her slim Jim's and jack links beef jerky. I used to feed her potato chips a lot, and I still do feed her potato chips. It's not nearly as much, because she won't usually eat potato chips, since I started feeding her beef jerky. She smells them and then gets this look on her face like she's not excited. Then she looks back up to me, wondering when I'm going to give her some beef jerky. If I don't give her beef jerky, she will often eat the potato chips at some point, usually after I've went back to my room.

She waits outside my door for me to wake up, and then when she has to sleep, she sleeps right where she can't miss me if I get up. It's like when I've got beef jerky, she sleeps with her eyes open.

You've never met a kinder soul than me, and you seem to have little ability to appreciate kindness in people.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
