I felt like I had a moral obligation to report this person to you, when I first realized that my matter would be going to the top of the house. It was a very sad thing to me, that I had to do this. But he is dangerous. There is some chance that is above 0 that he ends up doing something horrible to some woman or her children. I told myself that the responsibility to decide what to do about him wasn't on me, but that he's a part of the picture, and I had to tell the truth about him. Whatever the authorities did, my responsibility was finished and there would never be blood on my hands.

I thought the authorities might be worried about women and children who may get hurt. Alternatively, I thought that the authorities might not have much to say about them, because they are on a finite budget and they have a lot of people who pose a danger to women and children; he is likely on the lower end of the range, due to his age, and how long ago his crimes against children took place.

What I didn't expect, is what has almost certainly happened. That you and this bank have allied with him and leveraged him to get all the information you can about me. He did spend quite a bit of time around me. If this ever were in the media, and I spoke of his crimes against children, I'd be expecting a quid pro quo, where you help him discredit and coverup his crimes, so that he could continue to be an ally to you and to tell lies about me.

This is an absolutely horrible thing to say. I feel bad sometimes and I really worry during those times that I am hurting your feelings. But this is what I'm dealing with. I'm very sorry if this isn't true. I'm very sorry if you're not really like this. I have very good reason to believe that the bank sought out him for information, even after they knew his history and what he's like. And I have a feeling that you may have too. There seems to be no limit to how low you will go. I don't know why it is that you are the way you are to me.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
