I'm going to try. I am really taxed right now. This is killing me. There are certain times in life, where there is a chance to do wrong. There are certain times in life, where there is a chance to devour the situation that is in front of you. It is part of our nature to do wrong. That's why all people do wrong. It is part of our nature to devour things that come our way. We see the opportunity. We smell the weakness of the other person. That impulse, to do what is good for ourselves and to disregard others in ways that are unfair and immoral, that's ultimately what creates the moment that is the battleground where we must win. You can't always be ready for that moment. To constantly anticipate and try to plan for it is exhausting. You don't win it by playing for the long run. For me it started out as a process of reflection and a desire to do what is right. Another part of it was coming to understand the fundamental moral flaws of my nature.

I can't type.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
