Today has been a day of terrible impairment for the most part. It seemed like it might be a good day at first. I was able to take a shower. But it's been downhill from there. I've been playing video games for 5 minutes at a time and surfing the web on my iPad. I want to finish my letter. I'm not sure how long it will take me, at this rate. I have days that are exceptionally productive, usually when I'm trying to get my sleep turned around and take an extra adderall. That is what helps me the most. I don't get consecutive days like that though. If I did, I could have this letter done in a week. It's still sitting there at 25 pages. I wrote half a sentence a few days ago.

I still feel bad about my little woman. It bothers me extremely badly. I am, however, probably going to get past this thing where I will never try to find a woman again. This is if I live, and there may be other variables that come into play. I will almost certainly live.

I think the impairment I am having is connected to my mother being in the apartment.

Clint Williams
