I'm a kindhearted man when it comes to people. I'm a heartless monster when it comes to snakes. That's for the most part. I do, at times, think about and feel bad about how these things die a slow, tortured death on these glue traps. But my life is fragile and I'm helpless and these things terrify me. We had a baby snake on a glue trap earlier. Mom was asking how to set it loose. The answer to that is to pour cooking oil over it outside. It will get unstuck and go along its way. But I followed up with don't do it, because we're going to need that glue trap. We don't have many and we're getting infested. Let the snake struggle and torture itself to death; there's room for more on that glue trap. I can't deal with this. My ptsd is causing this snake to get stuck in my mind. I have to emphasize that I am helpless.
