It's worth a lot to me to not be in the public eye. I would have a much better life if I got $20 million plus $5 million a year, adjusted for inflation. That's much better than what I have now. It is a must that I keep my evidence and evidence analysis materials. This is because I have to explain what has happened to me and my reasons for thinking what I think to my medical people, both present and future. This is an issue, because you have this intensity about you and you don't give a shit about me. You have the moral composition of a murderer. My evidence is a big liability for you, if it were ever to make it to the public. The way you work is you don't want as much as one single person to know what you've done. We've passed that point already, but that's not going to tone down your intensity. My evidence against you is overwhelming. It's already enough, with my video series, to convince anyone with the relevant expertise and most people without expertise. I just threw those videos together, with essentially no preparation. I'd just hit record and start talking. Despite this, as I say, you are toast. I've got more evidence and I missed a lot of points on my first go at these videos, due to the way I went about it.

Clint Williams
