This has nothing to do with you, but I'm recently bummed out by the climate change crisis and the potential end of capitalism. Capitalism has made the developed world very rich, but I worry that the earth's resources are being taxed and consumed at such a high rate as to not make it sustainable. If you have a finite resource, and you consume it at any rate, in a way that is not 100% sustainable, that resource will eventually be used up. I had hoped to see sustainability increase fast enough that our economic system could be perpetuated in pretty much its historical form. These WEF people want us to eat insects and to own nothing. They probably have a case to make for this that is hard to challenge. The U.S. and other nations are just too good at getting

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
