"I hit people where it hurts, when I get mad"

- it's not like I aim where it hurts, or go out of my way to hit where it hurts. The reason it hurts you, if it does, ties back to the nature of the situation that we are in, your conduct on particular.

The people on the other end have failed to live up to your highest ideals, on all counts. Beyond that, you have essentially made a mockery of your highest ideals, and implemented a caricature of the worst criticisms that people direct at you. You have proven yourselves to be outright liars. You didn't mean to lie, but you did. It is only within the microcosm of this situation with me, where all of this applies. It doesn't stop you from being all that you're cracked up to be outside of this. My situation is obviously uncharted territory and a real challenge. It's also the justice department's first time around with something like this.

I am getting longwinded again, but the point is that all I do is put the truth of what has happened in your face. I can be mean about it, and I have a belittling tone at times, but the main reason this has the capacity to hurt you is that the truth of the matter conflicts with your most deeply held values.

Clint Williams
