If my mother goes to work today, I can probably make you those Audios, that are in lieu of my letter. She usually leaves at 5 or 5:30 am. I will have to prepare the documents I made, which are 98% done. Then hopefully I don't get on many tangents. I'm getting sick of dealing with you. I never get sick of talking about this situation that we're in and what has happened to me, but I get sick of making endless communications to try to make you see the obvious reality in front of you, and make you see that I have been right the entire time. This whole thing is a farce.

Trusting you appears to have been a mistake every single time that I have trusted you. I am duped, or dupe myself, into believing that you have seen the err of your ways and that you have sympathy for me and regret for the wrongs that you have done. I am duped over and over. There are times where you appear to have concern about me, like when I tell you that I'm about to break. The problem there is that these times seem to always happen in conjunction with some development that is a liability for you. There is always an alternate explanation that you are just characteristically serving your own interests. It sometimes feels like you have a "the price is right" mentality, where you try to terrorize and torment me to an extent that gets as close to my limit as possible, without going over.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
