I've got another huge block of text to follow up on my next question. It's a work in progress and god only knows how large it will be by the time that I am done. The chat is truncated at ChatGPTs first answer. My first submission to the chat is just the background details that you already know. Like my history of child abuse, my various diagnosis, etc. basically all the background details that are relevant to an assessment for this particular personality disorder. After that, ChatGPT says thank you for those details, and prompts me to give it my next information, and I copied and pasted the rest of what I have on this document.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
