That I so unapologetically put the truth in your face does not change how immoral your actions are. It may be hard for you to see me as being as weak as I am. I am intimidating to you, because I represent a reality that threatens your sense of self. I beat you to death with this reality constantly. It doesn't feel good. But I am a disabled, dying man. I am disabled from the conduct of this bank.

A disabled man, who is dying, contacted the Justice Department for help, with a criminal case against people who had done both him and the Justice Department wrong. You responded with a merciless and vicious terror attack against a disabled man.

When I say I am dying, I mean that I am dying on the inside, and that I have an ongoing sense that I will not make it. I explained this in my letter. I make it, every day, despite this sense that I may not. You push me towards the edge when you are so cruel to me, and you need to stop it.

Clint Williams
