

Leonard Clinton Williams III [REDACTED]@gmail.com>

Nov 21st, 2023, 5:53 PM

Re: We need to solve this - audio

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>, civil.feedback@usdoj.gov

In my audios to you, I sound like an arrogant person who thinks he's better than everyone else. That's how I come across to you, a lot of the time. That's my guess at least.

For one, there are small signs all over the place in those audios. A well versed expert in autism who has a high level of acuity would spot them left and right. I can notice these small signs too, at least a lot of them I can. An expert like I described would certainly notice things that I do not.

For two, this is a trait of people who are above average intelligence. I have read this somewhere. They will talk down to people and criticize their ideas. The woman I worked with at Wells Fargo, named Julie Bell, was above average intelligence, and she would tear people to pieces when they screwed up her work. I didn't blame her either.

Like she sent this one Analyst, who eventually became a QA, her spread back, and it looked like a football playbook diagram. It was like "this number that I've circled here goes here", indicated by a circle and an arrow that moves the number elsewhere. And then there would be comments "this is a 20 year loan!", when the analyst put certain debt balances in short term debt. There were comments like this and circles and arrows all over this spread.

It comes across as condescending but it's more a product of frustration. In this analysts case, things didn't have to be wrong. All you need is a financial statement, an example from the past where it was done right, and a telephone. If you make an effort, you cannot fail if you have all 3 of those. Often times, however, the other person can't really help it, and the fact that they can't help it is lost on the part of the person who is making the criticism.

It has been a hard thing for me to realize, and has taken me a long time to realize, that when others look at the world, they do not see the same options that I see. Their actions and their conclusions and their understanding of the world arise from this. I will see a better route or a more sensible route or a better and more accurate conclusion or understanding, and it is easy to blame it on them, particularly when their way of doing things makes life hard.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams

(980)-[REDACTED]