I have no idea what you are up to. I need to make an audio about some of my ideas for how we could get this over.

If I had 60 mg adderall, it would definitely be better. I can pretty much count on getting that in the long term. When I explain to the neurologist how it helps me, that's what I expect them to recommend.

I have some ideas for how we can justify a large settlement amount, without causing issue for auditors, etc.

Then after that, I have ideas where they could pay me inflated prices for "trainings." They are such a massive company that I doubt that an auditor would want to examine a $2,000,000 expenditure for trainings. I could make some very good videos on how to do credit analysis. It would take me a long time to get a complete set, enough for one training. It would take me at least a year, probably more like 3 or 4 years.

But I could send them as I get done with them and be paid inflated prices.

This is kind of not cool with me, that I have to think of stuff like this. I should be allowed to take care of myself and live what life I have left. I also deserve way more money than what I'm getting. But we will do what we have to do.

The banks resources are so vast and this is such an ongoing bucket of frustrating work, that my guess is that they would happily discharge this liability for the amounts I have mentioned ($30MM, etc). It is the reporting and everything else that is the problem.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
