My brain is fried again. Having to recover. I was very taxed just a second ago, by opening one of my bottled meal shakes. Twisting the cap on those shakes is very taxing on me. I have to mentally prepare, kind of brace myself for the effort I'm about to make. It is similar to being in the gym and psyching yourself up for a barbell that's heavier than the heaviest you've ever lifted. I find breaking the top of a Pepsi can to be very taxing as well.

In other news, I have fixed the bug in my Twitter app, at least for now. I'll probably have some random tweet that throws a wrench in it at some point. I have also determined that my algorithm sucks. I will eventually make a better algorithm. I have the details roughed out in my mind as to what I need to do. I need to convert the spaghetti code to a set of classes too. After I fine tune my algorithm, that will be the next step. Not sure when I will get to that. It works just fine like it is. It just looks kind of sloppy on the backend and it's inefficient, with this crappy algorithm. Inefficiency doesn't matter at this point. I don't get many visitors to my site. The handful that I do get, get to hog the CPU resources. It's all theirs or all mine, when I use it.

I can't type any more.

Clint Williams
