I do a lot better on 60 mg adderall than I do on 40. This is the next opportunity for me to be right, and I certainly will be. When I go to a neurologist and get examined, they will agree with me that the appropriate treatment is increased adderall. They will probably have an understanding and a rationale, as to why it is that my adderall reduces my impairment.

Over and over and over again, my facts win. It's not exactly polite to tell people, but that's how it is. The correct answer for any and every question you have about me or my life has been a phone call away for now going on 4 years.

I have more to say about chris. I am now having an intuitive feeling, for which I can't fully explain why, that he has been in the mix. Listening to him is a dire mistake, with absolutely horrible consequences, for anyone who cares about the truth and cares about what's right and wrong.

He has committed a crime, by influencing your potential investigation into what happened to me. I would far rather you take advice from the devil himself, than to listen to what chris says. He's a strange bird and a tough nut to crack, but I cracked the case on him a long, long time ago. I can save you a lot of work. I can point you to people who can vet facts about him that I speak of, and who can attest to the fact that any claim he makes that I am "dangerous" is a deliberate lie.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
