

Leonard Clinton Williams III [REDACTED]@gmail.com>

Jan 14th, 2024, 4:48 PM

pendulum dowsing

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>, civil.feedback@usdoj.gov

From that first audio. I asked ChatGPT about this. Here is a copy of our chat.

--

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams

(980)-[REDACTED]

1 Attachments Scanned by Gmail

Along time ago, I did an exercise that I had found on the internet or elsewhere. It involved tying a wash ring to a string and then tying the other end of the string to your finger. Some like it was your index finger. Then, you draw a circle on a piece of paper. You ask "which direction means yes" and the wash ring will swing back and forth. Then you ask "which direction means no" and the wash ring will swing up and down. Once you're established yes and no, you can ask the wash ring questions and it will swing in the way that gives you the correct answer. It is a way to communicate with your subconscious mind, similar to automatic writing. Have you any knowledge of this exercise or exercises like it?

The exercise you're describing resembles a form of dowsing called "pendulum dowsing." In this practice, a person uses a pendulum, which can be any weighted object suspended from a string or chain (like your washer on a string), and asks questions. The pendulum's movements are interpreted as responses: typically, back and forth for "yes," side to side for "no," and sometimes circular or other movements for "maybe" or "unknown."

Pendulum dowsing is often considered a way to access the subconscious mind or, in more mystical interpretations, to connect with spiritual guidance. The underlying mechanism is thought to be related to subtle energy fields or the body's biofield.

pendulum-dowsi...