It may be temporary. I like Twitter a lot. It is a place where people talk about things of substance. Fits me well, as I am opinionated and not much on small talk. I'm getting quite the audience. I can build up my website and get a following too, over time.

But I am just a crushed human being. Such cruelty that I have been dealt. Whatever I'm going to do, ill be able to do it when this is over. If my social security review is not coming up, that's a good thing. I need longer to come up with the money, quite likely. I may ask DDS to get me a neurologist, if they review me before I am able to afford one. I'd have to look up the rules about that.

One possibility that I think of, on your end, is that you are in some mindset that we can't do this. That settling will create too many problems. Like you're working out how to do it, and there is no way. I have had the impression before, that you are in that mindset. This was some months ago, if I recall.

As batshit insane as it sounds, it may be the best thing to just tell the whole story to the public. That gets rid of the need to hide everything, that causes such effort and such stress. This is probably getting past exhausting for you.

If I have to, I will make the announcement to the public. I have thought that I might do that since before October 2020. I'm good at explaining things and I'm a charismatic preacher. Or I can tell you how to explain it.

Can't type more.
Warmest Regards,
