I had all these thoughts, but the main thing was knocking the hell out of this bank. Another huge motivator was being able to defend myself. I thought in terms of dying after that, constantly.

As the time got near to getting the various agencies involved, I thought in terms of helping people. I pictured, at many times, me having a great experience with the federal reserve and the Justice Department. I pictured it being a cooperative effort, sometimes with me being a key player in the whole thing. It's like I'm always pulling things off.

I can't remember if I told the LA Times signal line much about that. Most likely I did. For sure I told them about helping you. I can't remember if I included the other thing.

But sometimes I'd picture myself answering questions on a podium, with people being outraged and taken aback, and possibly explaining it to the media. I'd picture me doing this with the people at the Justice Department in the background, maybe over to the side, thanking god that it wasn't them explaining that Wells Fargo had someone kidnapped and that we're going to keep the bank going for a brighter day. I'd picture them simultaneously being amazed at how easy and how fast this could be smoothed over. Like it would be painless and fast for you, when you'd been absolutely in hell over it. With smoothed over, I've got a way with words, in certain contexts. This is especially if I prepare in depth.

A lot of this was extremely naive, obviously, but as I'm thinking of it right now, I do think it would have been quite possible to smooth every bit of it over. It's possibly that way now. Can't type

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
