There seems to be no way around the social security administration knowing about what has happened. You are the people who can pull the levers of things like that. We might need someone assigned to my case as a dedicated person we can trust. You seem to be wanting to work with me and that is a good thing. I don't think the bank cares about $30 million + $5 million a year, and we can justify it. My justification will work for that. We need to work together, not oppose one another.

I think you will see what I'm saying with my justification. It leverages several elements of the situation. I need you to get me that settlement, if I can't afford all of the services involved. I am going to get a lawyer, but I will need a forensic analysis done and I may need other information. I am constrained by resources and if I can't come up with the cash to do an analysis, I need it from someone.

My lawyer may pay for it. I need a forensic earnings capacity analysis, to come up with a figure. It is in your best interest to settle this with me, the way that I want, I think. And my lawyer won't pay for it, probably not, because I'm not going to settle on any terms other than my own. If I absolutely have to lower my offer, I just may. But I'm not going to settle for something that is too low, for the sake of my lawyer. I don't want him/her to have leverage over me like that.

For your purposes, you may need this earnings capacity analysis prepared a certain way. Part of what we've got to do is present the evidence in a way that you can pass for your purposes.

We've made up as we go along this entire time, for the bank's benefit. We can keep doing that. This thing where they cheat and expected me to play fair wasn't right at all. If we present the evidence as it is, it's not going to work for you. We've got to work together.

And I'm realizing a tiny bit of a problem here, with the evidence. I'll figure that out later.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
