Re: audio about my rationale

I had a brief interview to discuss doing work for a company that helps people get loan modifications. I had sent them a message on their contact form offering to help on a trial basis. I told them I am an expert with behind the scenes experience and if they're not happy, they don't pay and we go our separate ways. That interview put it in my face, how completely unsuited for doing work for others that I am. The stress of knowing I had that interview tormented me for days. I was tempted to cancel it, for that reason, every single day. I wanted to alleviate my torment. It is also an endeavor for me to manage my life such that I can make an interview like that. It imposes great hardship on me that is not remotely sustainable.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
