Re: audio about my rationale

If you saw the reality of what has been done to me and the condition I am in, the only question left to answer is do you care about the consequences of your conduct and this bank's conduct on others? Your behavior adds up, in some possible interpretations of the facts, that you feel like the consequences of this bank's conduct are someone else's problem. Whose problem is that? Well rule #1 is that the consequences of the bank's conduct absolutely cannot be the problem of the bank. To allow that to happen is, in practice, the ultimate crime. Rule #2 seems to be that it also absolutely cannot be the problem of the regulators and the authorities.

Rules 1 and 2 mean that the consequences have nowhere else to fall but on the victims, who usually engaged with this bank in good faith, with good intentions, as I did.

You do everything you can for them; then they literally are willing to murder you when you want something from them, even when they rightly owe you 10x or 50x what you are asking for. 50x is by far an understatement, when you look at the whole picture. I asked for a conversation and $0, after they destroyed my life and what I cared about most.

But we don't have to do this. We can do things differently. We can make this something good for everyone. I have also, very frequently, I am sure, lost sight of or trivialized the cost of this on you. The authorities and the regulators have paid a price for what has happened. This has been hell on you and hell on the people at the bank. I wish it didn't happen every bit as much as you do. I wish I could magically be better, but it will never happen. they asked me to fill out a page of paperwork at the clinic the other day. I couldn't and I am sure it was obvious to the girl who watched me that something very bad is wrong with me. When I get these automatic hostile reactions, that is another time that it is obvious something is wrong with me.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
