The Dutch Protocol people beat me to the punch, by about 10 or 20 years, in everything that I say. They do it unknown to me. Here they are using the core gender identity concept that I reference. I happened upon it on ChatGPT, and found it to match my concept of a neurologically based sex identity, in a way that I rather liked.

I second their notion, absolutely, about autistic people. I have had one of them confuse the hell out of me. I've also had autistic legitimately dysphoric people who are extremely easy to figure out.

"For example, it can be complicated to disentangle whether the gender dysphoria evolves from a general feeling of being just "different" or a whether a true "core" cross-gender identity exists in adolescents who suffer from an autistic spectrum disorder"

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
