The way that it looks, there is no point and no reason for anyone to follow the law, in particular as it relates to this bank. You are impinging on my human rights (violating them actually) and my rights under the constitution. I'm going to be lawful anyways, but give me one reason that I should? Should I not have the right to defend myself against this terror attack?

If I hacked their system and siphoned $50 million out of their cash account, you would have what basis to prosecute me, other than "the rules don't apply to them, but they apply to you" or "the rules exist to protect and enforce their interests, period, we are just not up front about that."

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
