And I repeat- you will never dig yourself out of this hole you are in. If and when people see that this is what happens to them when they report Wells Fargo for a crime, they're not going to be wanting to do business with this bank. I have been modest in many of my settlement offers. It is easy to make an argument that they have all been modest, especially when you consider that dozens of people are getting a get out of jail free card, for serious crimes that could have them facing 10, 20, 40, or 50 years in prison.

You coddle this bank. You design a process that is oriented around the gratification of the people at this bank. As you do that, you consider the victim less than human and terrorize him with demeaning abuse and crimes. Then you lie about the victim behind his back, to everyone you can. Then you terrorize the victim for literally years, as you break your neck to make the victim out to be the bad guy. You invade every millimeter of his existence, in your terror campaign, after he offered to help you over and over and over.

Why would anyone want to deal with this?

The way to make good on your wrongs is to make it right with the victim, not to continue to terrorize the victim.

Warmest Regards,

Clint Williams
