I will be very happy to get this over with, as long as I get a decent settlement amount. I want my own place so badly. Also on my list is to get with a neurologist and get my adderall upped. I've got another letter to the OIG that I'm working on. It's kind of abrasive but I'm going to finish it and send it to him anyways.

Getting my adderall upped is the secret. It helps my impairment a lot. I can't justify it based on psychiatric illness alone, getting it way upped. A neurologist will agree with me though. I am sort of on the fence about if I want to get a brain scan first or if I want to just get this over with. My attorney will know.

Part of me is hoping that you want to settle this, that you have a real desire to help me as long as you can dodge this liability, and that you have already paid off my lawyer in advance. Then I can call him and he will magically know the parameters of the situation. What works best for me is someone who can say "here is what we are dealing with. This is what we need. This is what we can't have. This is what we have to work with" and then let me decide and also exercise my creativity in coming up with the best thing. If you had called me with such a proposal at any time, since March 2020, this would have been over at that time + 3 days or a couple of weeks at most.

The Justice Department people are a little mysterious. You are like inhuman monsters to me, but you have the clear and obvious appearance of being principled people who have a heart when I see you on Twitter and YouTube. If that latter part of you has any effect, I would feel confident that I get something fair.
