You are depraved murderers and I should have never believed in you. The day may come when I declare myself above the law, to make this a fair fight. The day may come when I take the law into my own hands. You are pathetic pieces of shit and you are murderers.--

I am in the wrong for some of the things I said, but you know that I'm the good guy in this fight. That's why you cover everything up. Please come up with a situation that is a win/win/win. You can go down in history as doing the right thing, even if only in the history of your own mind. I will do what I have to. I am just trying to save my life. It probably overwhelms you and maybe frustrates you that I send so many emails. My suffering is what drives that, and my fear for my life. I am a demolished human being. I mean this attack has damaged me severely. I'll remind you that the big damage was already done before I even realized that Wells Fargo was behind this. I made a choice to fight Wells Fargo, a very powerful Wall Street bank, but I made this choice after I had already been severely damaged. It is not like I decided to fight them first and then they responded with an attack. They attacked me and disabled me for life, and after trying to negotiate an easy way out for them, for months, I had no choice but to fight them. I saw this as being a far different situation than it is. It was beyond me that the justice department would leave me to suffer like this or even sponsor crimes against me. I thought that you would be appalled. I understand that you have reasons for doing as you do, and it would mean the world to me if you would please just help me. Please talk back and tell me what I have to do. Leaving me in the dark is one thing that can lead to unbecoming behavior. If I made you mad about AU girl, you should have told me when you first were irritated. When I'm blindfolded, I don't know what to do. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

What's happening as I am sending these emails to you is we are documenting and narrating the slow, tortured death of a human being. I don't know what it is about you that causes you to murder a kindhearted man like me, but I so wish that you would change course and help me. I could not live with myself if I was as cruel to another human being as you are to me. It will all be forgiven if you will just please help me. This suffering is unbearable. I look forward to the day that I die and I look forward to the day that you help me. One of these days will come before the other, and that will be the end of my battle. I don't want to cause harm for anyone and I don't want to cause harm to the economy. I just need your help. I am suffering beyond what words can describe. Talk back to me. The way you ignore what I say and don't talk back is demeaning. I am suffering unbearably. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This will never be over for me until you help me or I die. Even if you do help me, it won't be over for me. I am permanently damaged, very severely. I'm starting to get a sense that you don't care if I die and in fact you would prefer me to die. I don't know if that is true but it is possible. I am in the middle of something very big. If you would help me it would mean the world to me. If you don't want to get me a settlement, you could help me die. My brain is injured very severely. This suffering is so intense it is unbelievable. If you really knew how much I was suffering, you would help me at all costs, even tanking the economy. On a scale of 1 to 10, my suffering is at 1,000,000. It is also unsafe for people to live with me or be around me in my residence. I get in bizarre trances where I think about murdering people when people stress me out. It is something to do with this brain injury. Something very bad is wrong with me. It is a disaster waiting to happen, and this bank shouldn't be allowed to do this to people. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

If I could be locked up somewhere and have a comfy life wherever that is, that would work for me. I need a place like my apartment in Charlotte. I need to have my adderall and be able to take extras if I need them. You don't care to help me and are going to let me die, but that is one option. I have been massacred by a company that outweighs me by 200 million to one, and I am a ruined human being as a result. I get the death sentence because I worked for this bank. You are going to let me die and you also will not warn others of the dangers of working for this bank. I wish so bad that you wouldn't be this way. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This is a very inconvenient reality and you seem to be just ignoring it. Ignoring reality doesn't make reality go away and the only way that this will end, if you do not intervene, is tragically. I didn't do this, this bank did. You are mad at me, as if I am the problem. I am not the problem this bank is and you need to have the courage to face that reality. From: Leonard Clinton Williams III [REDACTED]@gmail.com>

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>, civil.feedback@usdoj.gov

I get the idea that Wells Fargo wants a lawsuit. To me this is unfair because you have sponsored a cover up that has rigged the game in Wells Fargo's favor. If this is how I get help, I will do it however. I would need Wells Fargo to go behind the scenes and get someone who will represent me. When I contact these law firms, I get discriminated against every time. I will never be able to get one to represent me. If it would somehow serve Wells Fargo's interest for this to go to court, they need to get me a lawyer. I have contacted many in Charlotte. Morgan & Morgan, crumley, Gilman or something like that (Gibson maybe), I can't remember the rest. They can get one of these to email me or call me back that they will help me. Then we can go on with the formality of the court process. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I hope you realize that I am really going to die. Your behavior is odd. I would think you would want to prevent this with the simple offer I have given for a small settlement and to get my medication back. I would imagine that you wish to be something other than a murderer. I am a decimated human being as a result of being massacred by a $2 trillion bank and also the abuse that the doj has sponsored. You are torturing a disabled man to death. Please stop this insanity and help me. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You need to get experts on this. They could talk some sense into you. I cannot. You are either the most pathetic, evil, worthless, immoral people on earth, or you do not get three gravity of the situation. I am a decimated human being. That is the main thing that I need you to understand. This condition I am in, of being decimated, causes me to be extremely handicapped and it causes me to live in horrific pain. My pain gets better sometimes in the evening and also sometimes when my mother gets home. It never goes away however and I am always handicapped. I suffer beyond anything you can imagine for at least the first 4 hours of every day. I am telling you exactly what I need. I know what I need, you do not. I need you to listen to me or I am going to die. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You have massacred a human being. My struggle keeps getting more brutal and intense, due to the crimes of Wells Fargo, the crimes of Wells Fargo's accomplices, and the crimes of the US DOJ. I told you that my last audios would be the last I sent, if you either helped me or set up a call. You have done neither. What's happening now is I recently read that it may take up to 2 years to get a disability decision, if my appeal is denied. This means I will go 2 years without any income. What does this have to do with Wells Fargo? Everything. The reason that my disability application was declined and the reason that my appeal may be denied is that atrium health's records are fraudulent and are prepared for the benefit of Wells Fargo. It was for this reason that I wanted a brain scan to document my brain injury. It would trump atrium's fraudulent records. You can't fake a brain scan. When I go to Novant and tell her that I want a brain scan to document my brain injury, she instead orders a brain scan for Wells Fargo's purposes. I was ok with this, as I had been led to believe that if I got a brain scan for Wells Fargo, I would get help. It of course turns out that I got nothing for that brain scan, and I have no idea how I'm going to afford a brain scan like the one that I wanted. My aunt let one of her bills go past due so that she could pay the down payment for Wells Fargo's brain scan. She can't pay for another one. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

"they pay them off. I can promise you. They pay off lawyers and judges, and they pay people for perjured testimony. This bank is a criminal shit show terrorist superpower run wild." "I want to go with everything against this bank." I had this same feeling and I relied on an honest justice system. What I got instead was the US DOJ jumping in the dog pile. If you fight this bank, prepare to fight it all alone. Also prepare to be criminally victimized left and right. Prepare for them to pay off your lawyer, pay off your judge, hire spies to follow you around, you name it. You are taking on a terrorist superpower that is accountable to no one, and who in fact has the highest authorities in the land as its taxpayer funded accomplices." I characteristically get very angry in this audio. You have destroyed my life and you have massacred me. Please make it right. $8 million would do it. I deserve far more but will settle for that outside of the public eye. I want you to think about me and the terrible hardship you have caused me. If you make me out to be the bad guy, it is because this is too easy to do. If I am the bad guy, then you don't have to do anything to help me. Please be conscious of this. I am not the bad guy. I never did anything wrong. I have been honest in my dealings with you and I have been humble and generous in the outcomes that I ask for. I have a very severe brain injury and there is something terribly bad wrong with me. This is all as a result of what you have done. I suffer incredibility and I ask you to please make it right with me. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I don't know how to be with the people on the other end. Your behavior is cruel and inhuman. You seem to not have decency at all. Whatever you are, I need your help. I have been massacred to the extent that I will never make it without your help. When you pretend that this massacre didn't happen or that I have not been massacred, it changes nothing. The reality of the situation doesn't go away and I have been suffering unbearably for far too long. I cannot live like this. It is more than I can take. I need your help. P.S. Wells Fargo tried to con me into talking about my mental illness on Facebook groups. In the past 6 months or so, I have made many public posts about my mental illness. I am trading what remote semblance of privacy I might have for exposure. Wells Fargo and atrium health have ruined any chance of privacy that I perceive myself to have. Wells Fargo has sent my private health info all over the earth. It is also due to the fact that, as of now, it doesn't exactly matter if people look down on me or not. I will not have anything in life except what is given to me. I am a destroyed human being. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I think it's time to give up on you. I believed in you so much. I continued to believe in you against 100% of the evidence. I needed your help so badly that I didn't have much choice but to believe in you. It was a mistake to believe in you. I am heartbroken by your unbelievable cruelty and your cruelty hurts. I will be sending you some final communications. I want to prepare a letter to go to the criminal division, civil division, F.B.I., and OIG. I asked all of the above for help, and I got none. I have no choice but to see you as vile, vulgar human beings. I wanted to be your friend, but that is no more. To be a friend to the United States Department of Justice is to be an enemy of justice. You are an obstructor of and an impediment to justice. You are criticized for coddling the powerful and prosecuting the powerless. How am I to say anything but that this is absolute truth, as a disabled man who has been tormented and tortured by you, as you simultaneously protect this bank from any and all consequences of its behavior? You are probably glad to see me go. I imagine you cheering as you see this communication. This is the behavior of someone who doesn't recognize my humanity and also the behavior of someone who is not concerned with the kind of person he or she is. You have cashed in fully on the benefits of having no decency and of aspiring to nothing. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I would have been fine indefinitely in Charlotte. As long as I can control when I'm around people I do fine. But this injury has me such that I am not fit to be around people at unpredictable times. You don't realize how dire this situation is. You need to wake up. When you ignore reality, reality doesn't care that it is being ignored. It continues to pound right on, being the reality that it is. There comes a point that reality will no longer let you ignore it. At that point, you will wish that you could go back. You can go back now. You are in the present moment where you can change the course for the better. Please help me there is no more than I can take. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

It seems pointless to contact you, but I do anyways. I have been disabled and being pounded with abuse for now roughly 3 years. At the same time, my life has progressively collapsed, all while I am helpless to do anything about it. Everything that happens feels like a hammer blow to a helpless man, a man who already cannot take any more. I have fought one hell of a fight and I am very resilient, but I am worn down and the next round of hammer blows will be the death of me. You are going to be a murderer. Wells Fargo is going to be a murderer. Atrium Health is going to be a murderer. All of the above have participated in the brutal criminal abuse of a disabled man who is suffering unbearably. You have witnessed my death in real time, and you have murdered me with abuse as I have already told you that I am dying. It doesn't have to be this way. You can stop this from happening. I need this unbearable nightmare that I am living to be over, and you could do that. I need money and I need my medication back. I will beg you for help until the very end. I ask that you please help me. I can't take this.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am destroyed and decimated completely. What I cannot take is my disability appeal getting denied, and it's going to. If you help me I can get by without disability until I can get an approval. If you don't help me and I'm also denied disability, that will mean that this nightmare won't be over for another 2 years. I can't take 2 more years of this. It is your fault if I get denied because you wasted my brain scan and sponsored healthcare fraud. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

The next round of hammer blows will kill me. You need to do what is morally right. I mean no one at all any harm. I am going to fight with everything I have to get my disability appeal approved. You instead take the side of the criminals and sponsor more crimes against me. How can you be this way? You are torturing a disabled man to death? I have sent you this previously, but when Wells Fargo gets information about me, it goes to Abbey and then Abbey gets the info from this guy. This is his Facebook racism party. He is a former law enforcement professional and many current and former LE were on this profile and participated in this. My disparager's name is Kermit. He is the large man with glasses holding the figurine. This person is very dangerous and is full of hate. I have already also sent Wells Fargo screenshots of him using the N word and joking about having sex with a deceased ex girlfriend. This is who they chose to believe, over the kindhearted man who did everything for them.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I sent you the printout of the Facebook racism party, hosted by my disparager Kermit Johnson Jr., whose filth Wells Fargo deliberately spread, and who Wells Fargo presumably may still try to associate with by trying to get information about me. You should do something about this racism party. Kermit is a former prison guard and many current and former law enforcement professionals are on this profile. This man is dangerous in a general sense, and back when I had more naive conceptions about how the Justice Department operates, I had intended to report him to you and have something done about him. I felt that I had a moral obligation to do so. He has committed terrible crimes against children, and he has told me that he would have no trouble killing someone and burying their body, if the need arose. He sadistically tortures animals as well, and has done this since his childhood. Again, a very dangerous man, and this racism party was attended to by many current and former law enforcement professionals.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I send you these communications where I try to make it more cordial and make you out to be good people. I try to frame it in a way that you are good and I am good. I try to appeal to the better part of you. The idea that I get is that you don't care. My words mean nothing to you and are just noise. You don't care to try to understand or to engage with me. You don't see me as a full fledged human being and you see your own interests as too important. I try and try to be your friend. Look at how kind I am being to you. Who else talks like this to people who have committed horrible crime against him? I am a bigger man than you are or ever will be. The day will come when you become a murderer. If I die at my own hands, it will still be your fault. It is you who gave me more than I can take, with your cruel abuse. I don't know when that day will be, but it will almost certainly come. You will win in a match where we see who can be the biggest bully or the toughest thug on the block. For you to engage in such a battle is immoral. You are the United States of America and I am one single disabled man. It is immoral and yet you have done it. You have crushed me through an abuse of your ample power. What you cannot win in is a match to see who tried the hardest to be a decent person and to live a moral life. Who strived with the most effort and who took the high ground the most. I told my entire life's story to The LA Times signal line, including every rotten thing that I've ever done. I thought it would one day reach the whole world, yet I told them anyways. I knew that it would be painful beyond belief, to lose my privacy all at once like that, but I also knew that I have nothing to hide in the end. My efforts to be a good person and to do right have been too great; they are such as to be beyond the capacity of most people. I am a good man despite the the limitations imposed upon me by certain aspects of my nature. I'm too tired to finish this email. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This situation isn't going anywhere. I have been massacred and that is the reality. You can choose to ignore reality or you can choose to see reality, but reality is always there in either case. This reality will be in your face, just maybe, one day. I will remind you that this is over me asking to have a simple conversation at no consequence to anyone. I will get justice or you will be a murderer or both. I talked to the people at broughton hospital today. I was going to try to talk them into contacting the media and admitting to unlawfully sending out my healthcare records. I can't say for 100% sure, but they come across as being coached by the people behind the cover up. They bullshitted me and sold the farm, as is usual. If you're wondering why I'm back to emailing you again, it is that I get the sense that you think it is possible that I will forget about this situation, that somehow my "final letter" was a step in that direction. I didn't intend on sending you more emails when I sent that letter, but then this came up. You seem to want this situation to go away. It never will. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You have judged a kindhearted man as being some kind of deceitful, sick person. You have done this after seeing illegally obtained healthcare records that you do not have the competence to judge. My healthcare records are none of your business. If you had met me in person, you would see what a good and kindhearted man I am. You are very good at judging people in that context, much better than you are at judging people based on healthcare records. I have brow beaten you to death about this, but I'll do it some more- getting those records was a crime. That is the relevant detail for you. You are law enforcement. Crimes are in your territory. I should not have to send the attorney general and the United States Department of Justice explanations of my private healthcare records. In re those records, I can only play the hand I was dealt, and I have had a very hard life. I can only be judged on what I can control and on my efforts. WELLS FARGO SUCKS!!!

Leonard Clinton Williams III · 12m ·

I reported Wells Fargo to The United States Department of Justice in October 2020. A cover up quickly ensued, followed by US DOJ sponsored criminal abuse of me. I have been reduced to begging and pleading the US DOJ and Wells Fargo to help me. I am profoundly disabled from the criminal abuse of Wells Fargo and the various entities that Wells Fargo has induced into criminal behavior. I've been reduced to behavior that is pretty much pathetic, but I suffer so incredibly.

Here's how our justice system works- when you report Wells Fargo for crimes, the authorities's number 1 goal is to make sure that Wells Fargo suffers no consequences. If you're poor, they kick the shit out of you and put you in a cage. If you're a victim of Wells Fargo, the authorities victimize you.

I have been reduced to begging and pleading with you for help. I'm sure you got gratification from that. If I can at all help it, I will not be doing that anymore. You are law enforcement sponsoring crimes against a disabled man. This situation is a farce and I should not have to beg you for help. I have reported a series of vicious crimes to you and this is what you do. You have saw my illegally obtained healthcare records and judged me based on them. I would prefer that you stop pretending to be psychologists and start pretending to be decent law enforcement people. This sounds harsh, but how much respect have you given me? I have offered to have a discussion about these to you, and you deny the offer like cowards. You know you have no side in this fight, and this is why you hide from me and why you hide who you are. I will repeat, my healthcare records are none of the United States Department of Justice's business. There is nothing there that is relevant to you or to Wells Fargo. Have you confiscated those records from your criminal buddies at Wells Fargo yet? Is that not the role of an honest law enforcement professional who purports to protect innocent citizens like me? Keep hiding behind an email that you never answer. Be proud of yourself. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

If you wonder why I'm so moody and change my tone so much, it is that I do not have a stable idea of who is on the other end. Your lack of response leaves me to my imagination to find out how you are. My conception of who I am speaking to on the other end is always changing. I'm often not talking to the same person from one email to the next. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

In 2019, Wells Fargo made $19.5 billion. In 2020, in lieu of a criminal prosecution, Wells Fargo was fined $3 billion for opening "millions of fake accounts" by The United States Department of Justice. Each fake account involved a felony identity theft and a felony falsifying bank records. At "millions" of accounts, this means that Wells Fargo committed at least 4 million felonies. Do the math and Wells Fargo was fined $750 per felony. For a company that made $19.5 billion the previous year, this amounts to a fine of .0000038% of net income per felony. If you can't read that, that is 3.8 millionths of one percent of net income. In America we have 2.2 million people in prison. The median income, prior to incarceration, of these prisoners is $6,250. If you assume that each prisoner is incarcerated on 2 felony counts and apply Wells Fargo's rate as a sliding scale, you could release every prisoner in America for a total sum of $1,045. At the same rate, an individual making $50,000 a year could commit 5 felonies for a penny. During the years of the fraudulent accounts, Wells Fargo earned millions of dollars of interest income off of the backs of prisoners locked up in for profit prisons. It did this despite the fact that, using Wells Fargo's rate, you could release every prisoner held by a company like Geo Group for about what a tank of gas would cost you. Is it me, or has Wells Fargo illuminated what a farce our justice system is like no one else can? We call ourselves a nation of law and order, and for the evidence, we point to all of the poor people that we put in cages. As these poor people rot in cages, Wells Fargo executives fly around in jets, despite their bank having committed more crimes than every inmate in your average prison combined.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I sent to HHS OCR. I sent to NC DOJ. And none of you people did anything for me. I am a victim of a set of horrible crimes and I am disabled for life. Your actions make it a necessity for me to take the law into my own hands if I am victimized further. I suffer incredibly every day and I cannot take any more abuse. You are rotten and you are heartless and cruel unlike anyone I have ever seen. And how dare you look at my healthcare records. I have trouble not emailing you. My profound helplessness and my profound suffering are intolerable, and you are the one who can help me. It is your rightful place to help me. It is looking like you are just going to cruelly let me die. I have never seen such cruelty in my life, as how I have been treated by all of you people. There is not one sign or gesture to indicate that I matter at all. This bank has caused me so much pain. I can't take it. I do not forgive you for what you have done to me. Your cruelty is inexcusable. You have massacred a kindhearted man for no reason. I will die as a result of your cruel abuse and your decision to not help me. I have begged you for my life for over 1 year, and you are going to let me die. I can't take this. I will probably die when they deny my disability appeal. That will be the final blow that is too much. Financial stress, resulting from my being disabled and unable to make an income is the main thing that has been killing me this entire time. Every demand life makes of me feels like a hammer blow to a helpless man. I killed myself doing not much else than working for my whole life, so that I could be murdered by the cruel murderers at Wells Fargo and the United States Department of Justice. I dreamed of the day when the United States Department of Justice helped me. Instead, I got caught in a spiders web, spun by the cruelest, most rotten, and most pathetic people on earth. You people are not like me. You are not concerned with the kind of person that you are. I will die and go into the ground in terrible humiliation and pain, but I will be proud of the person I made of myself. I would rather die than be like you. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am suffering horrifically and I will not make it that much longer. Has the girl from my past said something that prejudiced you against me? If so, I need to be able to talk to you. I have my own witnesses who can attest to what really happened and to my side of the story. I'm not proud of my actions towards this girl, but nothing I have ever done with anyone, including her, is bad enough to justify leaving me to suffer like this. I suffer the worst during the day. As the day goes on, my suffering becomes less. I am profoundly handicapped and I'm very worried that my disability appeal is going to get denied. That will be a blow that I cannot take. One thing that I looked forward to, when I got some money from this, was to make it right with this poor girl from my childhood. I wanted to tell her that this was for her, that she deserves it, that people don't treat her like that and she gets nothing for it. I wanted to tell her that she is someone who deserves to be treated with kindness, to have her wishes respected, and to be respected and treated as someone whose thoughts and feelings matter. I wanted to tell her that I'm sorry for any and every time that I have treated her any different, and that I'm sorry for all the other people who don't care to say that they're sorry. I want to make it right for me, but to also be in a position to make it right for all the rest of them, who don't care to say that they're sorry. I'm going to die and those are a good candidate for my last words to her. I kills me, the thought that my fight will be lost and I will never be able to make it right with her. I need you to please help me. I could have a good life if you will help me. I could have a life where I get some enjoyment out of things. I could have things turn out well for me. I am in a fight for my life. I wish I still had AU girl to talk to. I'm going to die if you don't help me. That's why I'm so persistent. When Wells Fargo showed you my illegally obtained healthcare records, what was their justification for this crime? Do they need a justification, or are they allowed to just commit crimes because they want to? I said a lot of extreme things, back then, when I was not a person but a brain that had spun out of control. None of it means anything about me. It is wrong for this bank to try to take over my healthcare. My health history is none of your business, none of Wells Fargo's business, nobody's business but mine. The actions of all involved scream of bigotry against the mentally ill. I wish you would do better. You did something so good for me, when you found me AU girl. Once I started to like her I determined that she was my last chance. I didn't want any other woman except her for a girlfriend or a wife. She was perfect for me and I don't know how it is that you were so good at picking her out for me. That was so wonderful, that brief time when I had her and thought that I was getting help.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm going to send the OIG some more stuff. Your plan is apparently to ignore me and hope that I "get over it." You want things to be different for me some day, so that this problem goes away. That will never happen. I am living in constant torment and I'm going to die if you don't help me.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This massacre is more than I can get up from. I cannot be dealt 4 dozen felonies in a massive criminal massacre and then just go on like nothing happened. I'm going to die if you don't help me. I at least need money to fund my life and some specialized medical testing so that I can get disability. Once I have disability I will be able to prepare a place to die. I wish that you wouldn't be so cruel and that you would give me enough to allow me to live. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This torment is getting the best of me. It has been over 3 years of nonstop, horrific suffering. It is more than I can take and there appears to be no end in sight. If I had money, it would fix it, but you are going to let me die. You are going to let me die for no reason. I put the probability that I die as a result of what has happened, within the next 2 months, as 99%. I don't understand why you do this foolish murder. I don't understand why you are so completely cruel and heartless. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I ask you to help me. If you would just set up a time to talk we could all work it out. I would abide by any agreement we come up with. This apartment is a torture chamber. What I need is a place like my apartment in Charlotte. I need adderall, 60 mg. I need money to pay bills and money to pay people to do the things that I cannot do myself. I know exactly what I need. I am telling you directly. The above would be circumstances that I could live under and be pretty happy. It is well within your means to give me a life like the one I just describe. Human life is going to be lost as a consequence of this bank's conduct. It will have been completely preventable. I am a completely decimated human being. People do not realize how seriously injured that I am. I need you to help me and there is no reason that I shouldn't get something out of this. Wells Fargo has enjoyed a bonanza of getting away with crime. So has atriium health. So have the mobile crisis counselors. So have them all. Novant Health made out real well on their scam. They got my poor aunts $250, for this worthless brain scan. It's getting away with it all, across the board, and the only one left empty handed is the victim. Pick up the phone and call me. Your behavior is extremely puzzling. I can't help but think that there is some piece of the picture that you are missing. It could all be resolved with a phone call. I am very good at explaining things. The time will come when you no longer have the opportunity to make that phone call to me. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

It is going to be terrible when I die. You need to do something to stop this. It is not my role to do anything. I have no choice but to die. I absolutely cannot take this torment. I need you to help me. $100,000 would help me very much. $200,000 would help me that much more. I need money to have my own place and to get the very expensive neurological testing that will document my disability. Once I get disability income and my medication back, there is a remote chance that I could make my own life, without Wells Fargo giving me any more settlements. If you haven't figure this out yet, I always message you the first thing when I get up. That is because I am always suffering at that time. This situation may be over. Today I started a medication called Strattera. It seems to be making me better. I think if I can get my dose upped, I can work again. I will still feel terrible, but will not be so handicapped. As far as getting a girlfriend, my will has been crushed. This stigmatization in the mountains made me so helpless. It was futile. Then Wells Fargo crushed my soul by bringing it to Charlotte. All I wanted to do was to contain this, and what I needed was a conversation. This bank responds with this massacre of cruel abuse and I am just done. It is pointless for me to try. I am in tears as I am typing this. I will live with terrible sadness and loneliness until I die. I am still glad that I probably won't have to die in the near term future. My plan was to go down the road and wait for an 18 wheeler to walk out in front of. That was if disability denies me. That would be a terrifying way to die, and I was very scared of failing and ending up a cut up vegetable in a wheelchair. If I got disability, I was going to get my own place and die there. I could buy something to poison myself. There are opiates so powerful that you can die from even touching them. That would do the trick and there are plenty of junkies around here to buy it from. I cannot die this way without disability. I do not have my own money to buy poison with, and if mom comes home too soon, she could call someone to save me. That's why I need my own place.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am overall happy. This is an improvement. If I can work again I will no longer be helpless. There seems to be only a limited interaction with my bipolar disorder. I am mainly happy because I won't have to walk out in front of an 18-wheeler. I was very worried about getting the timing right with that. I was worried about a number of outcomes, one of them being that I don't get in front of it fast enough or that I trip, and I only get my legs ran over or something. I was worried about being a vegetable or in a wheelchair in all sorts of ways. If I get a job, I still may use my income to get my own place and die. I don't know. I feel so much pain and my soul has been crushed. You did something so wonderful when you got me AU girl. I miss her so badly. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I can still tell that my brain is broken. This takes 4 weeks to see the full effects. I am thinking that most likely I will be able to work, but work and life will be very, very hard. I'm happy that I won't have to jump in front of an 18-wheeler. I felt bad about that, but I had no choice. I would likely traumatize the truck driver. Again, I had no choice. This new medication is torture. While I'm on it, however, I don't want to die so intensely. You need to face the reality that I live everyday- this bank massacred me and I am damaged beyond repair. When this bank leaves the picture, it leaves a gap that is too big for anyone else to fill. This bank used its enormous resources to cause this damage, and it needs to use those same resources to fix it. This bank has to be part of the solution. I want the following rules applied to this:1. It is not allowed to disparage me using my mental health history. This has been the go to strategy for everyone for over 20 years and it's bullshit.2. Subject: How to maximally serve the interests of Wells Fargo

From: Leonard Clinton Williams III [REDACTED]@gmail.com>

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>, civil.feedback@usdoj.gov

The goal of this whole process, from the justice departments perspective, is to maximally serve the interests of Wells Fargo. The way to maximally serve the interests of Wells Fargo, in this case, is to help the victim. I cannot take this suffering and I'm going to die. When I die, it is going to be horrible. It is almost certainly going to be in the news. It will be a horrific scene. I think Wells Fargo will have trouble weaseling out of it. I cannot tell you the pain and the torment and the torture and the suffering that I live in. It is unbearable and there are 2 ways out. 1 is that you help me. 2 is that I die. I need this suffering to end. I cannot live through another year of this. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

If I die, and I'm going to die, you will be found out. You have not done that well with your cover up. This whole thing is senseless. I asked for a conversation at zero cost and with zero consequences. I would have kept my word. Your opinion seems to be that the people at

Wells Fargo are infinitely more important than anyone else. I think that the public will think otherwise. This merciless abuse and murder of a kindhearted man, for no reason, is appalling and people won't have it. If you think that this tape that was made of me (I assume you have it) or my healthcare records will save you, you are almost certainly wrong. I have written my explanation and it is accurate. Professionals will vet it. If you have taken advantage of this poor girl from my childhood and got her to say something, the truth will come out. My explanation of that is also very accurate. I am an exceptionally good person, considering my life. I have worked so hard, having so much to overcome. I am someone for others to look up to, in many ways. The facts will show this. The truth will not be hidden. It is going to be a show of unimaginable horror when I die. That's what I expect. The onus for this horror will be on you. I need help to recover from this massacre. It is too much for me to take on my own. I live in constant torment and torture. I am very certain that you helping me is a far better outcome for you than what will happen if I die. And you need to think about what will happen when I die. How will you feel? There will be no turning back. I don't know what makes you this way. If I could just get what was planned with AU girl, that would be enough. I got your brain scan to get that. You should hold up to your end of the bargain. I am on a path to dying. I need you to interrupt it and that's what I'm begging you to do. If you do not, the day that I am dead, or at the very least seriously injured, is inevitable. That day is closer and closer every day. I cannot take this suffering and I could have a good life if you will just help me. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I cannot believe how I am being treated as a man with no dignity. You just sit there and watch me die as I plead to you to save my life. I am telling you that I'm going to die. I'm telling you that you have the power to stop it. And yet you do nothing to help me. It is a necessity that I die, if you don't help me. There is no "help" that I can get outside of you. There is no point in any other "help" because it will not help me. I am going to die. I am on a path to dying. We are now past day 240 of nonstop suffering and torment, day after day after day, for over 240 days. I have not had one single good day. It is you taking away my medication and also the miserable circumstances I live in. How do you do this to another human being? What is wrong with you? Please do something to intervene. I'm going to die and it is fully in your power to stop it. I could have a good life, after working myself to death my whole life, if you would just help me. It will never be as good as it was before these people did this to me, but it would be good enough. Please help me. Please call me to discuss this if you don't understand.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am hoping that I don't get declined for SSDI. That would mean that I don't have to jump in front of an 18-wheeler. In any event, it looks like the most probable outcome is that I die. For some strange reason, you won't help me. I deserve to know why. I want to know why I didn't get help after the brain scan. This brain scan may belong on my tombstone, because not having the brain scan that I needed for my SSDI application may be what causes me to get declined. I got your brain scan instead, through murderous effort, and you did nothing for me. Will you please tell me why I didn't get anything? This is an absolutely horrendous outcome for me. I fought for justice so hard, and you are giving me absolutely nothing for my fight. I cannot afford to get absolutely nothing, and it is going to kill me.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

It would be a hard life with me, Elle. I am severely handicapped. My handicap will be a burden on us both. You will not have a normal life. Despite this, I think it would be a good life that we have. There is plenty of room for good times and I am a very genuine and caring person. We could have a family and a nice house. I wouldn't leave you for a girl in her 20's like the men you know do. I need these people to help me. Whatever pressure you can put on them, please do. I have been massacred by this abuse and there is no way that I will be able to live if they don't make this right. I will help them with whatever outcome they need from this. I am just trying to save my life. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

It is in my impactOnMyLifeFinal Audio and on the YouTube video for the video version of that file. I have slightly reduced the amount of mercy I have on you, in my settlement offer. Thank you for getting me AU girl. That was a wonderful thing that you did there, and I mourn that loss every day. You were plenty good enough and I thank you for the kindness that was in your heart when you did that for me. I am very sad that I cannot be the US DOJ's friend. I hate you for what you've done to me. No amount of money will make me happy. I want this bank to pay me so that I can move to another country where they don't speak English. I can start a new life there, to make up for the new life that you have massacred and destroyed. I'm very upset. I don't want these audios released in a FOIA request. If and when this comes out, most of my audios would be fair game. I don't like people knowing anything about me. I'm the most private person that you've ever met. I make these audios and send them before I think. I wouldn't have to make them and to continue to give more and more private details of my life if this bank would have done the right thing at any point in this process. Wells Fargo is the place of murdered souls and broken dreams. Wells Fargo is the place to work if you want to die having never known what it is like to be in love. I was going to make you an audio but I am getting very weak. I put the chances that I get this in the media in the next month to two months at 20%. I have some new schemes that may work and some previous schemes in the pipeline. I had planned on giving up on the media completely if I couldn't make any progress, and I may still do that. In that instance, I would revert to a roughly thought out plan I have to get national attention on this through my own means, to do it more organically. What has happened though is that I have thought of some new schemes that sound promising. I have offered repeatedly to help Wells Fargo in return for Wells Fargo helping me. I have given this offer when asking you for help. I can no longer offer this. What appears to be happening is my body is dying. I am getting very weak on and off, every single day. I have this feeling that I need to lay down and die. It is strange, but I can tell that my body is talking to me. My body seems to know that it is going to die, and I can sense the relief that I would have if I die. I very strongly feel a drive to give in to this feeling. It's like it is time for me to die. There is something different about me and how my intuitions work. This is the result of the constant, horrific stress that I was under for so long. It was all that I could do to keep up my fight, by October 2020 when I had sent my complaint. A horrific struggle of constant, unbearable pain. What I needed was for the US DOJ to take some of the stress and burden of this fight off of my back, and to get me some relief. Instead, the US DOJ massacres me with more crime. My hellish struggle not only continues, but gets worse as I am under attack by more vicious crime. In a 4 week period in July and August of 2021, I lost 30 pounds from stress alone. I could feel my system being fried during this period, and I knew that I would face premature health problems as a result. My struggle went on for a long time after that, until I finally got some relief from the social security administration, in June of 2022. I got a letter saying that I would get $1,581 a month. That was a huge relief and relief of not much more than that would have kept my body from prematurely dying, had I got it in 2021. This would have been nothing to Wells Fargo. I asked for $5,000 multiple times and this would have been a lifesaver. When you're Wells Fargo and you commit a slew of felonies, it is too much to ask for you and to pay $5,000. I'm not trying to brow beat you but this is the reality of the situation that we have. My evidence and evidence analysis folders now have well over 500 documents of different file formats. It may be over 1,000. I am not sure. I have spent nearly every useable hour that I have on this for years. Of this 500 to 1,000 files, many are exact duplicates. I have some of the stuff stored in more than 1 folder, with each copy being the exact same file. My evidence analysis files are a lot of the same evidence rehashed in a new or slightly tweaked analysis. I still have a mountain of stuff, even when you account for this. You have all done a terrible wrong, many terrible wrongs. You can still make something constructive out of this. As of now, I have very little capacity to help you make something constructive out of this, however. It is a shame because I had so many ideas. I need an enormous sum of money. That's what's in this for me. I would also like for the people involved to be punished, but that may be too much to ask and I'm not sure I could endure the court trials. If you would help me I would try. In re an enormous sum of money, there is likely no amount that would make me happy and there is certainly no amount that would make things right. There is no price that can be put on what I have suffered and what I have lost. I think $3 billion is a more than reasonable, and a very modest request, in reality. I want to get some money and move to another country. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I want to again tell you that I'm sorry for not being grateful enough for AU girl. I don't know what was going on there. I think of one possibility where you had people from wls and my offices helping you pick someone out. I picture you as being very excited and I picture you having put a lot of energy into it. My response to this was horrible, in that case. You were plenty good enough and I thank from the bottom of my heart for the energy and kind thoughts you invested in me. Most likely, though, you never cared about me at all and AU girl was there for you to look good for the media. When you find out there is not much chance that this makes it to the media, you cruelly took her away. This whole process seems maximally designed to serve the needs of Wells Fargo. If you gave me AU girl and whatever money that would cost, it would give you something to explain, and this slight inconvenience for you is too much to ask to save me from dying, after I killed myself my whole life to be the best person that I could be. I didn't die in my sleep last night. I'm very weak and it is coming. It may be any day now or it may take a year or 2. I can tell that there is something wrong with me and it is a result of this massacre. I released my new YouTube videos today. I also made some social media posts about Wells Fargo. I feel bad every time I say something bad about Wells Fargo, but I have no choice. How am I supposed to view these people? Given what I have experienced, what am I to conclude? These people have murdered me over nothing. I'm upping my odds of getting this in the media to 50%. That is for the next 2 months. I'm still getting sick of dealing with the media however. I may give up even if I have some good prospects in the pipeline. I'm good with my own resources and I find relying on others for things I can do myself can be a waste of time and frustration for the sake of nothing. It would be hard for me to do, to get national attention on this, relative to how the media could do it. The big news outlets I contact all have huge audiences. I will have to build my own audience. With me in control I can make it happen. That's the advantage. You should help me. Wells Fargo should help me. You should both do what is right. I will win this fight or I will die trying. I want justice out of this.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

this is my reply to a Facebook post. You will get this eventually, anyways. Your accomplice in crime Wells Fargo has spies in this Facebook group, and they report it all back to them. You are a million times more powerful than me and I am scared of you. I will still tell you the horrible truth, as I see it, to your face. I will also tell others the truth about who you are. The facts do not favor you, my friends. You need to think about who you are and who you want to be. I want to believe that you are capable of so much more, that what you've done to me isn't all that there is and that it can be explained. You were supposed to be my best friend. You ripped my heart out with what you did. I am damaged beyond repair. But anyways, here is what I said. Point to me the part where I am not accurate: "nobody seems to care" is exactly right. The federal reserve is pathetic. Wells Fargo illegally obtained my healthcare records and showed them to the US DOJ and the federal reserve, and I'm sure others. These records were known to all parties to have been illegally obtained. This crime was a breach of the deferred prosecution agreement with the US DOJ. Wells Fargo just waltz's into their office to proactively show them evidence of a crime. That's how lightly Wells Fargo takes the US DOJ. The federal reserve cops an attitude with me when I contact them. I sent them one question "how many people in your agency have seen my illegally obtained healthcare records." For this communication I received no response. They don't want to admit that the bank they purport to regulate has committed very serious crimes against its employee. the fed is not there to protect you, it is there to protect Wells Fargo. You contact congress and you have to wait 2 or 3 months to be told they can't do anything. The US DOJ is their accomplice. They covered up Wells Fargo's crimes against me, committing more crimes against me in the process. They also allowed Wells Fargo to cover up other crimes that I reported to them, I am sure. I sent them details about a wire fraud victim where the wire fraud clearly involved Wells Fargo. You can forget getting help from the US DOJ. The more credible your claims are the more vicious the US DOJ will be in committing crimes against you.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I will add that I have nothing against congress. I give their rep Denise 10 stars out of 10, for her kindness and her dutiful attempts to help me. It's not congresses job to prosecute Wells Fargo. You're supposed to do that. We have reached a point where there is no possible good outcome for me. There is better and there is worse, but there is no good. I am permanently damaged. You have to face some tough realities. The toughest of which is that this bank is responsible for its own conduct. This bank put you in the situation that you are in. We are in a mess and we are looking at a nightmare, and it was all brought to you by Wells Fargo. We have to address Wells Fargo's behavior. The second tough reality is that my healthcare records are nothing but evidence of a crime. That Wells Fargo can use my healthcare records to prejudice the authorities against me says something about the bigotry of the authorities. In no other context is someone's private health information used as if it is incriminating evidence against him. It is not a crime, to have a hard life, as I have had. It is not a crime, to have a mental illness, as I have. It is not a crime to say some extreme sounding things when your mind is completely gone, as I did. What is a crime is for this bank to obtain these records against my consent and in violation of the law. What is also a crime is each of the 30 + felony counts I list in my complaint. The felonies most likely total over 100, and I missed at least a few dozen in my list. I will not bother to send you an updated list. I could add 20 more crimes to my list. This would be added to the dozens that are already there, which would in turn be added to the millions of crimes the bank committed before it victimized me. I want to believe in you. I want to believe that you are capable of more than this. I want to believe that you can face this challenge we have with more moral courage. You will have to decide what you are going to do about this banks behavior. How you will get out of the situation that this bank has put you in. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I regret emailing you when I do, most of the time. You just go through what I send you looking for what you can use in criminal abuse of me. I wish that you would have been my friend. Part of why I am emailing you again is that I'm suffering worse than I have been. When I suffer I lose self control, to some degree. I'm very upset about the prospects of this whole matter going public. This is going to be extremely distressing to me. I am in a situation where I cannot win. I am picking from a set of horrible outcomes. What I want is money so that I can move to another country. The United States has been ruined for me and I'm clearly not welcome here. I'm not interested in spending another 20 to 40 years getting disparaged behind my back about my mental health history. If I can get some money, I can go to another country and make my life count. I can escape the hell and the unbearable nightmare that the USA has become for me. I put the odds at 50% that this is in the media, in the next 2 months. It's going to kill me. I wish you would have given me AU girl in January 2021. I was still fresh, back then, relative to today. I could have had a happy life. Now I'm worn down and I'm dying. Any possibility for a happy outcome for me that existed before is completely gone. I'm still a lot better with my medication and with SSDI, though. I don't know what the hell I would do if it weren't for those 2 blessings. I at least have the ability to fight back in life, to some degree. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

There is something terribly wrong with me. I know that it is from this battle and the relentless stress of my life tanking. I have a feeling like I'm going to have a heart attack soon. My arm went numb for at least 45 minutes last night. I have been very weak and short of breath. I've told you this before. It is an ongoing thing and the day is coming. I cannot afford medical care and I need medical care for this. I need this bank to be made to make it right with me. I have been so severely damaged. I felt my system being fried during this battle, and I correctly anticipated that I would have premature health problems. You could have stopped this. If you would have helped me when I asked you to get me $5,000 to relieve my stress, that would have worked. A few months in a row of $5,000 would have given me time to heal. If this sounds outrageous to you, you are from another planet. I'm asking for a $2 trillion bank to give me $5,000, to save my life after it injured me and left me a disabled, dying man. The rightful cost of these crimes is to prosecute the bank and tank the global economy in the process. Is it worth $5,000 to keep the entire economy of planet earth running? Given that it is running at my expense, at the cost of me being denied justice, is it too much for me to ask for $5,000? Relative to my condition as this battle progressed, I was still fresh in January 2021. You could have saved me from this massive damage to my body and mind. Now we have reached the point where there is no good outcome possible for me. My health is deteriorated to an extreme and it continues to deteriorate. The right thing to do would be for you to help me, but I'm getting pissed as I'm typing this. I just deleted about 27 sentences where I tell you off. I'm not sure about this being in the media. I'm lowering my odds from 50% to probably 30%, for the next 2 months. I will eventually give up on them and try to get attention myself. That will be an uphill battle, due to the fact that I'm damn near dead. I was so incredibly weak yesterday. I'm still feeling very weak today. I have a feeling that I will die in not too long. Anything you could do to help me would mean a lot. I would actually like to die, and I'm scared of having a heart attack and surviving. Life is unbearable for me, and if I have a heart attack and survive, I will be in that much worse condition. In re dying, I also do not want to die until I have had the crimes of Wells Fargo and of the various entities that Wells Fargo has induced into criminal behavior brought to light. The justice department is included as well, in the entities whose crimes I aim to expose. What you have done to me is terrible. You have allowed this bank to become a murderer right before your eyes, and you have also participated in the murder. It may be hard to see yourself this way, but this is reality. This battle has killed me. There is still a chance for you to do the right thing for some of this. I don't think there is turning back with this murder. I could be wrong. But you could at least make this bank pay me so that I can have some comfort and maybe some medical care. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

My offer to settle for $3 billion is more than fair. I could move to another country and make my life count. I like the United States and I would hate to leave, but it is necessary. You should have taken me up on my offer to help Wells Fargo, back in early and mid 2021. If I were fresh, I could fix their business. It would take a period of years, I think, probably 3 years or maybe 4, but I could do it. Now I'm in such condition that I will be unable to help them. I am most likely at the end of my life. What this bank needs to do is work with its regulators and do some capital raising. The fed has capped its balance sheet, and this is hampering them from fixing their business. The other thing that is hampering them is that they want to go on like nothing is wrong. The game plan is to post a profit next quarter, each and every quarter. Then, of course, they pay dividends. Fixing this business and posting a profit, business as usual, are likely mutually exclusive options. For sure it will take far too long, doing it that way. The damage to its reputation, by the time it is fixed, will be enormous. The weeds have grown for far too long in this bank. They need to get the fed to lift this asset cap, so that they can raise equity capital. Wells Fargo and the Fed can have an agreement and make a plan as to how the asset cap loosening will be for the purposes of raising capital, and not for the purposes of acquiring new customers or taking on additional revenue producing assets (loans, etc.). They can use this equity capital to renovate their business. Step 1 is to go throughout the entire business and find every business practice that is even marginally unethical. They need to weed out all cutting corners. All of these are scandals waiting to happen. Step 2 is to fine tune each business, each business process, and each point of contact with the customer. From what I've read, Wells Fargo's banking app for smartphones crashes very frequently. To use that as an example, if it were me, I'd have the whole app rewritten from scratch. I'd hire the best in the programming biz to do this. Have it written using test driven development. You want a perfect app that has 99.9% uptime or better. If it is written well from the beginning, fixing it when it breaks will be easy. The goal is a perfect experience for the customer. The last sentence in the preceding paragraph relates to a broader thing that I have noticed about Wells Fargo. Wells Fargo does not seem to focus on the customer having a perfect experience and Wells Fargo generally doesn't seem to value competence or realize how important competence is. A lot of shoddy work and shoddy business practices seem to come out of Wells Fargo. So that would be step 2. Perfect and fine tune every process. Make the customer experience consistently flawless. Mine your customer complaints for ideas of how to improve. Step 3 is to innovate and broaden the product offering. Focus on how you can meet a more diverse set of customer needs. This will beef up your revenue and your customer base. It will also beef up your profits and your cash flow. Your shareholders will experience price appreciation that more than offsets the dilution of equity resulting from your capital raising. Here is what this bank has going for it- it has a 170 history and an accompanying reputation that was built up during this same period of time. Over these many decades, it has built up a massive customer base and built up thousands of locations to serve its customers. These are the raw materials for the greatest company ever to exist. A 170 year history cannot be bought. It is a competitive advantage that has to be acquired the hard way, and a business with this advantage has the upper hand, as long as it plays its cards right. If you come to the table with a grand vision to use as you renovate and then optimize this business, you will have the best bank in the US. You will likely be recognized as the #1 company in America. I just typed this, kind of winging it. These are some of the thoughts I have had about this bank and what it needs to do. I forgot to mention step 0, which is to get rid of (meaning satisfy) all of the outstanding obligations to customers who have been harmed. This seems to be a big part of the regulators concerns, and if it were me, I'd be sick of looking at this list of customers at about 10 minutes into my tenure. If I had to take a loss for 1 quarter, or 2, or 3, it wouldn't matter. These obligations would be off my desk ASAP. I would be looking for ways to automate the resolution process. You also want to pay your shareholders. This seems kind of silly to raise capital and then send some of it back, but if most of your existing shareholders rely on dividends for income, you can't leave them hanging. The two groups you want to look out for are your customers and your shareholders. I am so unwell that I worry I will not make it through today. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I want you to take responsibility for what you've done. These heart problems are the result of my terrible suffering and horrific stress, caused by your abuse as I was handicapped and that handicapped me worse. I needed your help and you massacred me with crime instead. I am not sure, but I think it is likely that I do not survive another week. The appropriate thing to do, for others, is to take the law into their own hands. You're a bunch of deadbeat thugs and a criminal accomplice to Wells Fargo. There is no point in contacting the us doj about Wells Fargo's crimes. The us doj just massacres you with more crimes, like the thugs that they are. These people at the NC DOJ are almost as useless. They are deadbeats too but at least they don't sponsor crimes. If I had this to do over again, I would take the law into my own hands. I would likely use force against these people. Possibly shoot some of them. I would rob them and collect the money that they owe me. I would kidnap them. Does this sound offensive to you? I can already hear you yelling about how all of this is against the law, but what does the law have to do with anything when you're dealing with the thugs at the justice department. You are offended when someone like me just ignores the law and acts as if it doesn't exist, and this is just your bias against the powerless and your bigotry. You take no such offense to Wells Fargo's conduct. Wells Fargo is a criminal; you are a criminal, and you make a mockery of your mission statement to enforce the rule of law. I would actually not take the law into my own hands. I was just using that as an example. I do think that others are justified in taking the law into their own hands. This lawlessness that goes on in only one direction is not doable. I just told you off and I'm a dying man. I don't feel like deleting all of that. Have mercy on me and understand. You have mercy on yourself. Reflect on what you've done, and tell me if you wouldn't be this way or worse, if it were you. I want to put together my evidence stuff but right now I'm too weak. I will likely go at a snails pace and possibly die before I have it all together. If I can put it together you will have to answer for what you've done. I have been so badly weakened and I suffer so much. I need to have comfort for my last days on earth. Things are extremely bad for me and it is all the result of what you and this bank have done. I needed your help and you were supposed to help me. You are the justice department. You could have saved my life. You still have a chance to do what is right. I will not last much longer. I don't want to die in such pain and misery. I am going to be 42 in November. I worked myself to death for my entire life, to be destroyed by these people. This is the outcome that I face. 42 is young to die. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This banks conduct is going to cost me my life. I am weakened very badly. My weakness got a little better but is getting worse again. The doctor at cannon hospital told me that he thought the stress I was under in this battle was the most likely explanation of my heart problems. I told him how I lost 30 lbs in 4 weeks, from stress alone. This is what I am certain has caused my heart problems, and why I am almost certain to die prematurely. I felt my system being fried. When you add this to the relentless, horrific stress that I was under for years, it amounts to something that would kill anyone. Most would not have survived this long, I would imagine. I counted on you for help. I needed you to take some of the burden of this fight off of me and to provide me with relief. You instead massacred me with a brutal criminal assault. I am going to set up an appointment with a cardiologist. I can't afford it but I will do it anyways. I don't know what will come of it. My prospects for life are very limited. I am going to mostly suffer for however long that I live. I am facing a life not worth living. It is in my rational self-interest to die. I will still face a life not worth living if you help me, at this point, most likely. Still yet, you could make a big difference. I always wanted to help people and it kills me that I will die without being able to. I could also have some comfort, in this horrible condition that I am in. This is opposed to living in this torture chamber apartment, where I am tortured by my living arrangements and the conditions here, on an almost daily basis. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I have told you over and over how I am not fit to live with people. This is not going to turn out well. When Wells Fargo does this to me and then doesn't want to be a part of the solution, Wells Fargo leaves a gap that is too big for anyone else to fill it. You want to ignore this problem like it never happened. The problem is that it did happen. It is the reality and reality doesn't care that it's being ignored. It keeps on being reality. This situation is going to blow up in someone's face, quite possibly yours. I am far from ok. It will not end well in any circumstance, not unless I get something out of my fight for justice. If I had money for my own place, I wouldn't have the problem that I have now. My mother doesn't know it, and she can't tell, but my PTSD is causing me to have a feeling like I want to murder her, and I'm having to hold back and be very careful. When Wells Fargo doesn't want to help me and refuses to be a part of the solution, Wells Fargo leaves a gap that is too big for anyone else to fill. It is extremely dangerous for my mother to live here with me. It is dangerous for anyone to live with me. This PTSD has caused me to have incredible hostility. Wells Fargo did this to me. Their abuse and their crime spree have caused me to be a ruined human being. I am broken. My wires are faulty. There are sparks flying out of my head. That's what I mean when I say ruined. Take a machine, say some kind of robot, and beat the hell out of it until it won't work and just goes berserk. That's the condition I am in. I am not fit to be around people. Time will tell. This won't last forever. Something will come of this after I have warned you 1,000 times. The fact that it is against the rules for this bank to pay the consequences of its actions doesn't change the reality that its actions have consequences. You do not massacre someone so extremely and then have everything be just fine like it never happened. You need this reality to go away, and reality doesn't care. Reality isn't going anywhere.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

If I had money to get my own place I could be safe indefinitely. If I have control over when I am around people, I can make things work just fine. I am asking for $3 billion and will likely not take less. That is a petty amount relative to how much I have suffered. It is pennies on the dollar and will not be enough for me to feel good about life and about living. My soul has been murdered. Your abuse has contributed to this condition that I am in. You were supposed to help me but treated me as a man with no dignity. It is terrible what you have done to me and I've never seen such cruel murderers in my life. Every opportunity the people on the other end have had to make this ok for me you have not taken, and now I am doomed. Life will never be good for me. The US DOJ treating me as a man with no dignity has been a death blow to my sense of self. I have recently had the realization that this is why I can never be happy. Years of merciless abuse and being treated as if I don't matter have murdered my soul and I regret contacting the murderers at the United States Department of Justice. You don't care about me; you care about yourself. You are focused on what this means for you, and that I do not know. I don't know if I'll ever have a friend in this fight. The whole world may not even care or may not be on my side at all. No one may ultimately care that you are cruel murderers, who mercilessly abuse the disabled, because you can, while at the same time coddling powerful criminals and participating in their crimes. It is disgusting, and if people can't recognize that, that changes nothing; it just means that they cannot see. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I almost certainly have heart disease. I will find out, most likely, within the next 2 or 3 weeks. I am extremely tired most of the time, and I spend a lot of time on twitter. Here is an excerpt on a discussion about what mentally ill people (specifically those who are in a manic episode or who are in a psychosis, both of which apply to me when I was in the hospital at age 18) will say when they have symptoms. Maybe Wells Fargo can use its enormous network to track down and find the people referenced in these tweets. Wells Fargo can victimize them with impunity, illegally obtain their healthcare records, and show them to the bigots at the United States Department of Justice and the bigots at the Federal Reserve. You can then run a cover up and terrorize these innocent and powerless people. This is because, apparently, in the US DOJ's mind, the only thing worse than committing millions of felonies against innocent people (as Wells Fargo has done) is having a harmless mental illness (as I do). My harmless condition of being (that I did not and could not choose) ruins any chances I had with you, while no amount of sickening criminal behavior on the part of Wells Fargo will ever cause them to lose a drop of untouchable holiness in your eyes. You people need to stick to law enforcement and keep your bigoted eyes and ears out of people's private healthcare matters. Maybe you could DM the professionals making these tweets and ask to learn something from them. They are likely not that different than the 6 or 12 professionals at the hospital I was at, who (very much correctly) determined that I was a harmless person who got ill, and that it would be fine for me to go home.

Precisely. I, too, worked on locked units with the most severely mentally ill. The experience abounds. But I'll never forget one of my clinic patients - whenever she was becoming ill again, her first symptom was spewing racism. Once treated, she was the sweetest, quietest person yes, we all forget that every single one of us has the capacity to be "good" AND to bring harm. it's a healthy and regulated mind that dictates which parts of us is shown to the world.

i agree with this 100. as a psychologist who has worked in locked units, i have observe manic and psychotic pts say some of the most foulest things i have ever heard, but after 7 days of being properly treated they can be a completely different person.

Subject: What I'm doing now

From: Leonard Clinton Williams III [REDACTED]@gmail.com>

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>, civil.feedback@usdoj.gov

I'm going to keep trying to get this in the media. For that outcome, one of my next projects is to do some analysis materials for wrongdoing the bank has done outside of me. This includes wrongdoings to congress. My reason for doing this is that I predict your next move, if this comes to light, is to character assassinate me (or at least attempt to). I'm going to have to preempt you on that. I can tell you right now that any character assassination attempt at me will fail. If not in the short run (I don't even see you winning there) for sure in the long run. It would be so much easier if you would be my friend like I asked you. We have a mutual interest in resolving this situation, and I'm not a bad person at all. I don't want anything bad to happen to the economy or to the US DOJ, and I want Wells Fargo to fix their business, as long as Wells Fargo makes it right for me. If you would have given me AU girl and a settlement in January or February of 2021, this would have worked out well. Instead, this got dragged out and I was under more and more horrific stress all through 2021 and up into most of 2022. That horrific stress and particularly the horrific stress that caused me to lose 30 lbs in 4 weeks is what has fried my physical body. Then you continually treating me as a man with no dignity has destroyed my sense of self and made it a taboo for me to be happy. Im good at some things and not too good at others, and I think I could help you smooth this over with the public. That sounds insane to you, probably, but I think it can be done. If I have to report this to the media and get it in the public eye that way, you can expect a hellacious beating. You are very powerful people and may end up beating the hell out of me some more, but this will do nothing to the fact that you're going to get creamed. Your behavior towards a kindhearted man who did you no wrong is despicable. I sensed, in the beginning, that smoothing this over with the public would be a task that we had to handle, and I offered to help you with that then. My concern then was that I was disabled for life and I didn't want to lose my new life in Charlotte. That's what I wanted, and I was willing to do whatever it took. I also expected a lot of money. I thought that I would get a decent settlement and AU girl. That's what I wanted and I figured that I had some negotiating power. I thought that the US DOJ was compelling wellsFargo to help me, but in fact Wells Fargo appears to have been in charge the whole time. I didn't expect anything remotely like $3 billion then. I would have been happy to take what I could get, which I pictured being maybe $20 million + AU girl or $50 million + AU girl at the most. I have believed the whole time that no amount of money can make me better. There is no price that I wouldn't pay to go back in time, and there never has been. Wells Fargo, and perhaps the US DOJ too, has left the planet, it appears, in not accepting responsibility for what it has done to me. These people appear to be denying or trying to deny that I have PTSD or that I ever had PTSD. That's the sense that I get. In this, as a part of it, they are probably holding on to something about the DSM criteria not seeming to precisely match my circumstances. I could speak a lot for why this is not an issue and why this is not the way to think. I will save that for later though. The next thing they appear to be doing is saying that, even if I have PTSD (or whatever condition that I do have), they did not cause it. This is silly in a million ways, but I will try not to beat you up about it. We are in a very familiar situation, the situation where I am completely right and my facts are the game winners. It ends up this way almost every time. What I want out of this situation is $3 billion + possibly seeing some people punished. After I get that, I can talk to AU girl on my own and see what she wants and what I want. It is likely that I choose to move to another country, quite possibly just me alone. I have lost everything in this victimization and in this battle. I seem to not be welcome in the United States, no matter how hard I try to do right. I can move somewhere else, where people don't know me and where most people don't speak English, and then I can live and die in peace. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I keep sending you emails and audios where I'm a bastard to you. I'm sorry for that. I just get angry over your despicable conduct and your criminally abusing me when I'm disabled. This situation isn't going anywhere, I'm very sorry to say. You do not get how profoundly damaged that I am. I don't think that you do. It would be nice, for your purposes, if I would just take one for the team. I can't do that. It isn't possible. I am living in too much misery and face too much hardship. I will be homeless one day, if I don't get help. My soul has been crushed by this, too, and I have lost everything that I cared about the most. I am going to get my medication adjusted on my next appointment. That may help me some. There is no magic fix, though. This bank ought to face justice. Given that it will not do that, it should at least make it right with me. Your behavior has been very hurtful and you've been extremely cruel. The Federal Reserve is also bigoted and their bigotry and yours is despicable. You judge a kindhearted man on something that you do not understand and that is none of your business. At the same time, you seem to not judge this bank at all, for behavior that is very much within their control. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Every last thing I tell you is the complete truth. Any investigation into my claims will reveal that things are exactly as I describe them. It would just have to be a thorough investigation. I am extremely damaged. I also almost certainly have heart disease, and my PTSD + this battle and victimization did it. I need some kind of very intensive recovery program, or I will not live much longer. I saw this coming in July 2021. I asked you for help and you responded by massacring me with brutal crimes, and then you left me to die. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

The feeling I have now, and I could be wrong, is that this will almost certainly be in the media and my life is over. I wish I never worked for this bank and I wish I didn't give Jenny a link to my Facebook. What has been done to me is so incredibly cruel. I did everything for this bank and this is what they did to me. I want to get a large sum of money, the larger the better. Then I want to move to another country where the majority of people do not speak English, where I can write a book about my life and about my struggling with what it means to be a human being. I will never forgive you for what you've done to me. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

If you want to settle with me now and can do so without making any news that would put a spotlight on me, please do it. I will take something much less than what I've talked about recently. If you have to hide what you are doing, I will take smaller payments over time, small enough for you to hide. I will still need something pretty big, because I have serious health problems currently + more that are more serious on the way. I will likely never be able to work again. i am completely safe if i live alone and can control when people are around me. i can maintain that indefinitely. i also appear to be safe living here with my mother only. shes almost never here. this situation still scares the hell out of me, at times. I like AU girl a lot, but if shes still an option to consider, no way in hell she could live with me. we'd have to have separate houses and Id have to debrief here on how to be. it would be extremely hard to make it work, but we could do it. it is kind of hard to explain this feeling that I get. it is not an anger based rage, not the way that people without severe PTSD experience anger.i feel as if i am man who has went to war, and has been captured in a jungle, and been put in a wooden or maybe a bamboo cage, with no shirt and no shoes. picture yourself in such a situation, and keep imagining as i continue to explain. picture yourself being this man, and your captors being sadistic men who like to torture you. picture yourself having fought a brutal battle, before being captured. Now picture these men ganging up on you, around your cage. picture them taunting you cruelly, while they stick you skin with arrows and knives, through the holes in your cage. picture them ramming small logs with sharp ends through your cage, just to torture you. picture them getting endless delight from your suffering and your humiliation, and this going on for years.how would you feel, after years of this, everyday when you see your captors coming back to torture you? you would feel worthless and humiliated. years of this would have left an imprint on your brain. this is no longer something you feel, it is something that you are. in this state, you would feel kind of tender and you would be in incredible pain. im speaking of your emotional condition, though the feeling i am trying to describe has a definite physical component. when i feel it, i can feel it in my brain, somehow, and if i recall correctly, i can also feel it in at least parts of my body. the way out of this pain is not for your captors to leave. what you would instead be driven to do is to reclaim your worth from your captors. this pain and sense of worthlessness that you feel would compel you to want to murder them. thats what would go through your mind every time they come to taunt you, and you would so desperately crave that relief. Your pain would be so horrific and so unbearable. you wouldnt be angry, in any sense that you would recognize in your former life. it would be a new kind of rage. for me, it is best described as a strange kind of intense hostility.i am not in quite that dire a condition on an ongoing basis, but when I see the slightest sign that Im being treated as less important by someone, i start to become that man who is trapped in the cage in the jungle. i am very quickly overcome by this pain based hostility and i feel that i must murder the person who is treating me as less. this feeling is such that i feel it would rapidly intensify if things escalated. thus far, ive had very scarce instances of this, since living with my mother. the big factor there is that 1, shes never home, and 2, shes a pushover. she never asserts her needs and she almost never gets the least bit angry. there have been a few times where she got a little angry and i knew that i would go off the deep end very fast if things escalated. i would feel it coming on very strong. i made sure things didnt escalate. there have been other times when i had some grievance, and i had to exert my selfcontrol and not bring it up, because i knew that if the least little bit of fight got started, things would very fast become a disaster. there have been 1 or 2 other times where i felt like murdering someone other than mom. i can remember one where i felt it very powerfully, but the person left as soon as i felt it. it was a coincidence of timing. the person didnt sense my hostility. i have cried as i typed this. you have ruined a human being for no reason. but you have some goal or something that powerfully drives you. whatever that is, it doesn't matter. you need to make it right with me. what you have done is horrible, though i understand that you never meant to do it. i also understand that it may not make sense to you, how you did this, but i promise you that you did. i need you to act fast so that we can get a settlement before this goes to the media. if my media person responds, i will move forward as fast as i am able. i will be marching towards doom, but the current nightmare i am living is a motivator and i dont seem to get anywhere with you. The explanation of my condition- I kind of winged it, but it's pretty close. May have made me sound more hair triggered than I am, but the basic point that I am not fit to live with people is the takeaway. You have ruined a human being with your abuse. My neighbor called me names many times. He's a 2 times convicted rapist. He calls me the f word for gay people and the n word for black people. The first time he did it, I was outside and I felt myself getting hostile. I had an involuntary reaction (it seems involuntary) where I yelled at him. If a professional or even a layman saw what I did when I yelled at him, it would be obvious that something is wrong with me. I have this reflex like reaction and I appear as if I'm mentally retarded. He did this again several more times. He would yell at me when I'm taking a walk. I sort of built up a tolerance where I don't get so hostile. I'd call him a rapist and say things to him about him being on the sex offender registry. If he caught me at the wrong time it might be dangerous, and if he came in my house and said those things it wouldn't go over well. I'd be probable to try to kill him. He'd likely get away. I'm clumsy and can't run fast. But that's an example. I'm not totally out of control of myself. The landlady talked to him and he's toned down his name calling. The big danger is with people living with me. I know for 100% fact that I can manage this problem if I am allowed to live alone. I also have to be careful about where I go out to, and it's not a good idea for me to go to other people's houses. Right now my car is broke, but even if it wasn't I would almost never go out. If you will help me, I can have a good life. If this makes it to the media, it will be a massive blow to my life, although it will be a necessary one. I would much rather settle this without that. $3 billion is a very fair price (far too fair, in fact) for what I have suffered and lost. If you want to settle this before it goes to the media, I will take far far less. We can discuss the particulars. I am very easy to do business with. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

The fair price to be paid for what has been done to me is (apparently) to crash the whole world. I don't see why we can't be nice to me and pay me a lesser price. If you had given me AU girl in January or February of last year, this would have been over. I would be out of your hair and off your to do list. I would keep quiet and everything would be fine. Now, what's going to happen is this whole thing is going to come to light and it's quite possibly not going to be pretty for one or more parties. I will for sure take a beating, although I hope to make some friends and have some people on my side. One thing I will correct, in that audio where I talk about all the people who will pop up out of the woodwork and say kind things about me, we will probably have some of them, just maybe a lot, but there will likely be a lot of people saying negative stuff and it will be an uphill battle for me to fend them off. I will do it, but it will be a real chore. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This has gotten out of hand. I'm very unwell and not in control of myself. I had some strength a month or 2 ago. I felt like I had some fight in me. That's why I upped my offer to something closer to fair to me. That strength was fleeting and I'm extremely bad off. My life is over and there is nothing I could get that would make me happy, I don't think. If this gets in the media, I'm going to be destroyed by it. I will happily accept the destruction, in lieu of the nightmare that I'm currently living. I need very badly to move to another country. That is one use for this large sum of money I am asking for. I hope to be able to bribe a foreign government to give me citizenship. I am focused on this situation almost all of the time. It is because I live in torment and fear the future. I act as if I'm solely focused on some sort of immediate relief, and that's because I am. This is not rational but I cannot help it. I don't think too far ahead, in a way, and I don't have much of a strategy. I ask you for help because that advances my cause (possibly) and then I go and talk shit about you for being criminals, because that advances my cause. I do whatever I feel like advances my cause (and I do this almost compulsively, would probably be an accurate description) and there isn't much rhyme or reason outside of that. You do not realize what you've done to me. I am a massacred human being. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm not completely devoid of long term aims. I act in the moment for the most part, but I have projects that I make linear progress on. I don't know how to explain, not exactly. I guess you can say that I think of things that will help me in the long run, and I work on them when I feel like I can. It is just this anxiety and suffering almost never relents. Part of my problem for the last 2 months is that I seem to be having an depressive episode. I'm getting some medication for that on the 24th. I'm not sure how much it will help me. I think it would help me quite a bit. It's hard to tell what's what because I have so many sources of suffering. My PTSD doesn't torment me nearly as bad as it did this time last year. I still have some PTSD symptoms. The main thing is this thing where I feel like murdering people. That's the most limiting symptom that I have. It seems to be something that doesn't go away.

All you people sit around and talk and decide my fate, getting input from everyone except me. I sit here and suffer on an ongoing basis, and my suffering could be stopped in 5 minutes if you'd just talk to me. Whatever your concern is I could address it. You have taken probably 25 years off of my lifespan by letting me suffer and massacring me with crime last year. I knew for a fact that I would have premature health problems from the stress I was put under. Then what do you know? Not long at all after I had that intuition, I start to have very bad heart problems. I get the sense that Wells Fargo doesn't understand how what they and their accomplices did has caused all of this. I get the sense that they may even be attempting to deny it. It doesn't make sense to them, and that's kind of strange but then not so strange. You have a $2 trillion bank essentially take over my city and use my city to abuse me. You have a $2 trillion bank hit me with everything that it has, merciless, humiliating and cruel abuse for 2 and a half years. For the last year of this, the United States of America, aka the worlds only superpower, sponsored and participated in these crimes. The USA gave these people impunity and made them that much bolder and more ruthless. Give me $2 trillion in assets and $200 billion in cash and complete impunity and let me knock the hell out of you and torture you for 30 consecutive months. Then you'll see. It will make sense to you then. If this isn't enough to cause someone massive damage, what is? I have been massacred by people that outweigh me by more than 200,000,000 to 1. These people are unconstrained in their behavior, allowed to commit any crime that they wish. At the same time, I'm bound by the law. In fact, I'm beyond bound by the law. Even when I don't commit any crime, these people have me kidnapped by the police. If this isn't enough to wreck someone's brain with a prolonged unbearable stress overload, what is? How much must I be outweighed? Would a 1,000,000,000 to 1 ratio + complete impunity be enough? Would merciless abuse at that scale be enough to convince you, or would you still be in denial? I say this is not so strange, despite the ridiculousness that I just outlined. This is because, for this bank to accept responsibility for its own conduct and especially to face consequences for its own conduct is a radical notion. It has been conditioned by the Justice Department to take offense at this notion. Try to get them to do this, and the bar will continually be raised. When my poor aunt pays for a brain scan for them and that does them no good, they decide they want me to sue them. This is so I can enter yet another rigged game, where they can, in some combination, pay off my lawyer, pay off the judge, pay off the jury, and pay both my witnesses and their witnesses to commit perjury. The outcome of this rigged process will be that Wells Fargo and its accomplices didn't cause any of this. Wells Fargo can say that it was right all along. It did nothing wrong. It caused no damage. The people at the bank will say this, conveniently ignoring how they rigged the process through crime. This is forgetting that they've already altered the facts through state sponsored crime. In the circumstance that the judge, the jury, my lawyer, my witnesses, and their witnesses all have a conscience strong enough to turn down what they are offered, Wells Fargo can appeal the decision. They can take it to another court where they can try to pay off those people. They can up their offer for perjured testimony. They can try and try to pay for the answer that they want, so that they can represent it as truth. If this doesn't work, they can relent in fighting the verdict, but issue a public statement stating that they strongly disagree with the decision. They can use language that is fine tuned for precision and intended to deceive the people who hear it. They can continue on with their philosophy that life is about serving your own interests and is only about serving your own interests. They can see every conflict as a zero sum game. It goes on and on. This is how these people work. What is this bullshit? Can you think of anything more ridiculous? Poke one hole in the case that I've just made. Do it without denying reality, as you seem so prone to do. Give me one reason I should not expect every bit of this. I wish I could see you and them as something different than this, and sometimes I do. You tell me.

I say that Wells Fargo has been conditioned by the justice department to take offense at the notion that it has to face consequences for its conduct. The justice department has hit Wells Fargo with all sorts of fines. It's just that you don't do anything for its criminal victimization of me. Your fines are also quite merciful, in my estimation and in congress's estimation. They are certainly nicer than sending people to jail. I dish out a lot of abuse and say a lot of nasty things to the justice department. I hope you understand why I do this, and you've got to remember that you have criminally massacred me. You've also invaded my privacy by looking at my medical records, knowing them to have been illegally obtained. I'm probably nicer to you than anyone else would be in these circumstances. I really wish I could make it without getting justice. I've got a hell of a story to tell too. In re you not replying to me, there are 2 possible reasons for this that I see. 1 is that I am on do not answer mode, big time, because my situation is the end of the world. 2 is that this is part of your scam/cover-up in handling this situation. The not replying has a function in that. In the case it is item #2, I know exactly what you're doing and I've had that figured out for quite a long time. Somehow the way my intuition works, I can figure things like this out with extremely little effort. There are other possibilities that I do not see as likely, so I won't even mention them. Back to item #2, I guess there is nothing the public or others can really do to stop you, even if they know exactly what you're doing. Congress might get in the mix, and just maybe some of the public will initiate a boycott of Wells Fargo and this will compel you to reverse course. What I can tell you, with a very high confidence, is that if this makes it to the public, you're going to get found out. Your behavior has been despicable and you probably count on my mental health history to bail you out. You don't know what you're talking about, and there are plenty of people who do. This is the most ridiculous thing I've ever seen. You have a crime spree involving scores of felonies against one person, and the criminal's defense is "he has a history of treatment for mental illness." The DOJ buys this sickening, bigotry and prejudice based defense, and this becomes the DOJ's defense, as the DOJ sponsors more crimes against me. Maybe you should work to have having a mental illness codified as a crime. Then you could be more clear on your position. This would also cause a flurry of mentally ill persons applying for jobs at Wells Fargo. They would need a safe haven, where the law doesn't apply and where people are allowed to commit crimes by the millions. I've got to speculate, because you don't talk back, but in the case that my mental health history has anything to do with this, that's the case. What I just laid out quite accurate. I am making progress in my fight. Depending on what happens, there is a small chance that this is over. I am getting a new medication. I don't see it as likely that this changes much. I have been extremely weakened by this fight and this victimization. I really don't want this in the media, if I can avoid it. I wish you would talk back to me and work out a decent settlement. The problem is that I cannot survive with things going the way they are. I will end up homeless. If I have to get this to the media, I will expect something fair to me. I'll have to see what happens. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I just watched the press conference with Merrick Garland and Chris Wray. You seem like such kind and ethical people and I don't know why you are this way to me. I sent that email a minute ago because my situation here just got really bad. This living situation i am in is unbearable and it is also dangerous. That's why I get so mad. I am extremely unwell, as I have been for a very long time. This latest batch of news about my situation here has got me so mad that i can't see straight. If this all comes to light, I need you to stop beating the hell out of me. I will not be able to take much more. You are going to kill me if you don't stop. If I get something out of this that is fair, I can help you smooth this over with the public. I could have done this a long time ago. We can make this something good for everyone, with the exception of me. For me we can make it better, but there is nothing that will make my situation good. It will be a struggle for me to find the will to live. I like the United States. Other than this stigmatization that has destroyed my life, there is a lot of good here. I have learned my way around life in this country and I don't like to have to deal with things changing. With that said, it's going to be really tempting to move to another country, after all I've lost here. I will hate that outcome. It will be a massive blow. It may be necessary though. If I do, I will move to a place where most people do not speak English. I will also prioritize countries that treat people who have a mental illness with dignity. You'd be surprised at how easy it is to smooth things like this over. We've got a much more massive pile of crap than we started with. It would have been easier if it were just Wells Fargo's actions that needed explaining. Now I've got to explain away the behavior of the Justice Department. This still amounts to nothing. It is possible that I'm wrong about this, but I doubt it. The key piece is that I do the explaining, as if I'm on your side. You may have a very hard time otherwise. Most likely, you've got a plan in place. It will involve extremely dishonest tactics, dishonest attempts to character assassinate me, and probably a propaganda campaign. Your sole mode of dealing with this seems to be to go on the aggressive. You're big and powerful and people tend to be irrational. A lot of people are also lazy, and damn near everyone is (for the most part) sufficiently self-centered for your purposes. You've got a shot with a full-on aggression strategy. It will be easier doing it my way, and in the long run I will be able to beat any and all character assassinations and expose any propaganda. The facts favor me far more than they favor you. I have a sense that you will have some explanation, some defense, some rationale. Everyone on the other end is a person with a high opinion of him or herself. Everyone on the other end wants others to think highly of him or her. In this, your conduct poses a real problem. You have behaved in a terrible way. Then you add to this that I have brow beaten you for over a year. It won't surprise me if you have went completely insane and offer some explanation that is from Pluto. When I say this, about smoothing it over, I temporarily forget who I'm dealing with. I could smooth it over, possibly, but it would be immoral at this point, I'm very afraid. You people have the moral composition of murderers and justice is the last thing on your mind. I'm dealing with people who would murder me over this bank's conduct. My mother is going to end up dead. There is no point in going to a hospital about this. They cannot help me. What I need is money to have my own place, and I don't have that money because I've been disabled for going on 4 years and because I'm a decimated human being and can't make it now. This is a consequence of this bank's conduct. When this bank does this to me and then wants to exit the scene when it's time to fix the problem, it leaves a gap that is too big for anyone else to fill. Not getting anything out of my fight for justice is an outcome that isn't sustainable. You people need to make this right. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I will likely send you messages like this for as long as I live. You don't seem to understand what you've done to me. I am extremely and severely damaged. In re my mother, I get this feeling like I want to murder her. I've told you about it before. It is not something I can help and I constantly fear losing control, although I seem to somehow never lose control as I fear that I may. She has destroyed my life and I have additional bad feelings towards her, over my condition. I am prone to blame her when I feel especially devastated. It is something that I cannot help. This thing I have towards her is in addition to the generalized thing that I have for everyone. Any time I see signs that someone is treating me as less important than them, I very quickly get hostile. I feel like I want to murder them. It has happened pretty rarely, with the exception of mom, and the people tend to not do anything to further provoke me or they leave. If it escalated, I fear that I would not be able to control myself and that I would murder them. I know for 100% fact that if I lived alone I could maintain this situation indefinitely. No one would ever be in any sort of danger. Living with people is very dangerous for me. If I lived with someone other than my mother, almost certainly someone would already be dead. My mother is not here much at all and she doesn't get mad or assert her needs much at all. Any other person would be irritated at me over my peculiar living habits, my constant pacing the floor, and my being up at all hours. If I had a girlfriend living with me she would eventually start hyperventilating and going apeshit. All women do that. In either case, the minute people start yelling at me and going off in my house, they are dead. It is not something I can control and relates to this extreme pain and feeling of tenderness that I feel. The pain is unbearable and the way out is to murder the person causing it. I'm still liking my chances of getting this in the media. I feel the need to remind you that my facts are the game winners. Anyone who deviates from my version of what has occurred and the resulting outcome is dead wrong. For this there will be few or no exceptions. There are some inaccurate things in my complaint, while we're on that note. I wasn't near finished with that when I submitted it. I'm very tired and don't feel like listing them here. It's all pointless, because you know what has really occurred. I am not sure if you are in talks with anyone in the mountains. If you are the prime (and really the only) suspect is Chris from the pool hall. Everything I've said about him is true and he is the farthest thing from an unbiased source.

He wants me dead, over extremely irrational grievances. One possibility I have contemplated is that I end up dying and after the fact you charge him for interfering with an investigation. If you are talking with him, what he says about me is not true. That would count as obstructing the process. Once I die, people will be popping out of the woodwork to vet my version of the facts. This is concerning him and concerning everyone else in this narrative. It will be a nonstop chorus of people saying that things are exactly as I describe them. This will be accompanied by the same people having huge insights into me and the kind of person that I am. I have been a tough nut to crack for a very long time, but I've got myself sufficiently figured out at this point. When I explain the full story to others, it will all make perfect sense. You may be wondering where this story will come from. I'm going to write a book about my life and about being murdered by Wells Fargo, the United States of America, and the various entities that Wells Fargo induced into criminal behavior. You have murdered me in the cruelest way imaginable. You have subjected me to the kind of murder in which the victim survives. I am left to live on as this murdered, massacred human being, feeling this crushing pain every day. I am going to write my book so that if I die, it will be left here to defend me. I also have plans to make some extremely thorough and detailed audios and videos, to be played if I die. The purpose of the videos and audios will be to fight Wells Fargo from the grave. I am so keen on anticipating your next moves that I don't need to wait for them to happen. I fight this fight alone. I am so surrounded that even my own mother participates in this. I will continue to fight this fight alone after I am dead.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

In that hypothetical, I assume that you would care if you killed someone. I assume that it would anger you if you were given garbage information, then relied on it, and then someone died as a result. I feel a lot of the time that you wouldn't care if I die and that you'd actually be happy about it. The above is a draft email that I saved. Subject: More audios on the way

I'm making you some audios on my new computer. It's such a beast and it opens up new possibilities for my fight against Wells Fargo. I made about 5 audios this morning, starting at about 6:45 am. I had to quit on number 6. I got too tired. I'm going to pick up and finish number 6 tomorrow. Then I have more to make. They're kind of long. Ranging from maybe 14 minutes to maybe 18 minutes a pop. I suffer like hell. It is constant torment. I do not like living and I'm not sure that I ever will. I had a sort of good time making these audios. I need at least $3 billion to make life even remotely worth living. I will take less if I end up with no other option. $3 billion is pennies on the dollar. I am writing a book. It will detail my hard lived life and my being cruelly murdered by Wells Fargo and the United States of America. And that's what you've done. You have cruelly murdered a kindhearted man for no reason. The story that I tell will scream of heartless, cruel murder, and the story that I tell will be the complete truth. I have suffered the kind of murder that you survive. It is the worst kind of murder. You have murdered my soul. When you are exposed for murdering my soul, you will face consequences. Not everyone is as cruel as you. If I go you will go with me. This bank will have to begin the process of winding down, to close its doors for the last time. I don't mean to be pedantic or to take on a holy than thou attitude, but it is a terrible mistake to not listen to me and to not take everything I say as the complete truth. I think it can be easy to think less of me. I have self-control problems, and this is kind of obvious in my behavior. I may not seem too competent because of this and other things. You also may have been influenced to see me as some sort of dishonest person. This is another terrible mistake. Everything is exactly as I say that it is. I'm trying to save you and I'm trying to save me. It may sound insane to you for me to ask for billions of dollars. This is not at all unreasonable and if I had a group of experts to opine they would unanimously agree, and they would also agree that this is pennies on the dollar. At any and all times where you do not see things as I describe them, you need to find out why. You need to question yourself or look at this from another angle. Reaching out to me is the best solution. I am a decimated human being and am likely to scream and cry on the phone. My healthcare records are not going to get you anywhere. I keep coming back to those because I feel like they have prejudiced you. I have sent you an explanation of those. What may also need to be mentioned is that my behavior during that hospital stay was not atypical for someone having a mental breakdown (for which the technical term is psychosis). My childhood had a role in how my symptoms manifested, but I am far from the only one to say disturbing and extreme stuff. It is very typical. If you want, you can verify this. Have Wells Fargo illegally obtain the healthcare records of another 5,000 patients from that hospital. That hospital does as it pleases and so does Wells Fargo. This shouldn't be hard to do. In those records, look for the patients that were having a psychosis, particularly those that had a psychosis as a component of a manic episode. The hospital staff may not always be thorough in documenting what the patients say, but you'll find plenty of examples. I picture you justifying this criminal massacre by saying that I'm a "psychopath" and making these horrible characterizations of me. You may justify this based on my healthcare records. If you look it up on WebMD, it will not list saying disturbing and extreme things as a symptom of bipolar disorder. This is not a problem because the audience that my medical records are intended for are people who have no need to look up the symptoms of bipolar disorder on WebMD. They have years of education and specialized training, and almost all of them have a good bit of experience. We have entered into a complete farce. We have a bank and a bunch of law enforcement people attempting to practice medicine and justifying the criminal massacre of a disabled man based on the conclusions that result from this ridiculous exercise that they've undertaken. Do you really think you know this better than the more than a dozen medical professionals who have saw those records before you did? I'd like Wells Fargo to give me an example of a job that requires education, training, and experience. These people seem to have the notion that just anybody can do any job, and that's what got them into this mess. Bill Vanhoy is not qualified to run a credit department. He's also not qualified to practice medicine or to be a psychologist. As far as I know, NO ONE that works for Wells Fargo is qualified to practice medicine, and if some are, my medical history is none of their god damn business. Here's what I needed--I needed Wells Fargo to be an employer. -I needed Atrium Health to be a healthcare provider and to protect my privacy. -I needed Broughton hospital to stop committing crimes against me. I also need them to have a security protocol for their release of information department. When all of this didn't work out, I needed the United States Department of Justice to be a criminal and/or civil law enforcement agency. I don't need them taking over my healthcare. I need them to take this airtight case, that I built during a period of extreme and unbearable suffering, and hold these people accountable. I was so disabled that it took me 7 months to write my complaint, and when I sent it it wasn't even halfway done. 5 minutes of proofreading would get me 2 to 4 hours of pure hell with my symptoms. I even made a web portal for you. I mean it's on a silver platter. I don't get what I need. I instead have the whole god damn world looking at my healthcare records, as if there is anything there for them to see and as if they are at all capable of interpreting or understanding them. These people at the Federal Reserve are the most extreme and cruel bigots I've ever met. I mean it defies reason and I don't even know how to describe it. It's probably the case that the people at the US DOJ share this same extreme prejudice. In my audios I have spurts where I get mean and demeaning towards you. I also call you bigots and criminals on Twitter. You people have really pissed me off. I used to think that you are my friend. The point of this is that I will change my tune, at least slightly, if you will just help me. We've reached a point of no return however, and you can forget me being happy. You can forget any possibility that I go for as much as one single day where I do not think about this situation. It will dominate my life and I will always look forward to the day that I die. I can also tell you that the chance that you get found out, concerning your cover-up and other crimes, is a least 95%. You will not get away with this. You will have to answer and it will reflect terribly on you. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980): [REDACTED]

This idea, that I'm the enemy because Wells Fargo victimized me or that I'm the enemy because you've victimized me is upside down, backwards, and inside out. Im not the enemy I am the victim. I was just watching a 10 minute cnbc clip about Wells Fargo. What it reminded me of is how bad I hate what is happening to this bank. It's absolutely terrible. I feel bad at times, for going on the aggressive. Wells Fargo just wants to fix its business and the people there face all kinds of challenges. Everyone's life is hard, at least from their perspective. You say that you protect the interests of the United States. That is part of your stated goal. It seems that you are of the opinion that the interests of Wells Fargo are the interests of the United States. Wells Fargo has the potential to benefit the United States. It already does and it has for a long time. Businesses get their capital. People get a home. People have the conveniences that come from having a bank account. What you must realize is that the interests of Wells Fargo and the interests of everyone else in this country only line up to a certain extent. There are plenty of examples of times when the interests of Wells Fargo are counter to the interests of others. Conflicts of interest define our lives in this country. They are to be found everywhere. Your other goal is to uphold the rule of law. Life does funny things to us, and it seems right up the alley of the way things go that the American economy, and therefore America itself, depends on the prolonged impunity of what looks to be among the most criminal enterprises in the history of the world, if you exclude organized crime. With this situation with me, you are just kicking the can. We've got a big problem with this bank. I gave you the perfect opportunity to do something about it. I knew from fairly early on that this might run into a snafu with the economy. By this I mean we might have a big obstacle that prevents any sort of criminal prosecution of any of these people. What I expected, though, was for you to share my view that this situation just can't be. This isn't doable, to have a bank that is allowed to mercilessly abuse innocent people with no consequence. This is the type of situation that brings you back to the drawing board. We've got to find some third option, and we've got to do something to fix this situation. That's the attitude that I expected. You will have the exact same problem after me. You will still have a bank that is allowed to mercilessly abuse people with no consequence. It's most likely going to be that much more pumped up. The crimes will get more vicious, as the bank's self-perception of being above the law is reinforced over and over. I sent you the thing about the wire fraud victim. Odds are at least 80% that a Wells Fargo employee or multiple Wells Fargo employees were involved. You do nothing about it. An innocent woman who can barely buy groceries is made another victim who will not be made whole. She paid the price for this bank's conduct. Then there is the lady who had the judge paid off in her foreclosure case. This is another one where we have a 70% or 80% chance, minimum, that Wells Fargo was involved in this apparent crime. This happened subsequent to me submitting my complaint. They're still committing crimes right under your nose, even after all of this. I send you audios where I curse you out and beat you to death. I will no longer apologize for those. This is despite the fact that if I could prevent myself from saying so many curse words, I would. I just turn on my computer and think out loud. I will not let this bank get away with this cruel murder of me. I will make sure that you and them have to answer for who you've done. Maybe I'm wrong for doing this. I don't see how. It's my bedtime.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I just watched the rest of that video. The various commentators were talking about the chances that the bank gets broken up. I would hate to see that happen. I want this bank to make it right with me and then to fix its problems. What is needed is for the bank to do some capital raising. It needs to get the fed to give it some leeway on the asset cap. If they let the bank raise capital, it can fix its problems. By raise capital I mean sell some of their treasury stock or do a seasoned equity offering (if they don't have much treasury stock. Seems like they do.) The other option is to pay for murdering me. I'm writing my book and they will pay for what they've done to me. If they get a cease and desist from a judge or pay off a judge to rule in their favor, I will rot in complete misery in prison for the rest of my life, as long as that means that my book is kept in circulation. I intend to give it away for free online. Digital download. Just maybe I charge a handful of nickels for the audiobook version (if I do that, I'll include in the purchaser's license that they can share it with as many people as they want. The point is to get my story out there. Making money is a secondary concern.) If something happens to me and I die as a result of this victimization, it will not turn out good for anyone. My book will defend my character and my life and my striving and my efforts and there will be no bullshitting their way out of it by defaming a dead man. I've got my story in me. It is a story that should never be told, but I have no choice but to tell it. I have no idea what you think that you've done. You people are strange. It is again, as I have told you, the heartless and cruel murder of a very kindhearted man who had already suffered enough. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

The way I act around you is not normal for me. Everything changed in April 2019 and it was downhill from then. This massacre has decimated me as a human being. There is something horribly wrong with me and it cannot be fixed. You never knew me before this and so the way I act probably just seems strange or annoying. I am a ruined human being and I am so incredibly unwell. I curse at you in my audios but if you were to call me back I'd probably start shaking and crying and if you were in my house and you looked at me wrong it wouldn't end up good at all. My little sister is incredibly hateful and rude and it is a must that she is never allowed in this apartment when I am here. The least little thing makes me feel like I am that man trapped in a cage in a jungle. What I am telling you is complete reality. Nothing is added, and in fact, some stuff is taken away. I've edited these past 2 paragraphs that you're reading. The first one sounded much worse. My condition is understated in this. I can make it work indefinitely if I am given money and my own place. I know that for sure. Otherwise it is only a matter of time. I tell you that what I'm saying is complete reality because I often get the feeling that you do not let it sink in. Even after I get money, I will still want to die. I will just have less torment because I can live buy myself and buy nice things. I am incredibly damaged. My will is running out and is actually pretty much gone. I need to write my book. People will cry when they read it. It is an incredibly sad story. You ignore the problem repeatedly. The day will come when it cannot be ignored. The day will come when you no longer receive emails from me. You will wish that you took me up on my offers to make this work for everyone. I made you some more audios and I'm debating on whether to send them to you. I don't plan anything and I end up spending 70% of the time telling you off and/or asserting how completely right I am and have been the whole time. I seem to have an awfully high opinion of myself. I notice this when I make these audios. It seems to me like this high opinion is kind of accurate. I will probably scrap these audios and make them over. I keep thinking that the reason you won't help me and the reason that you have criminally victimized me is that you have been prejudiced by my healthcare records. I think that for sure you have been prejudiced by my healthcare records, but it is probably a bigger factor how my situation is the potential end of the world. I still feel a need to explain my healthcare records and I still feel that the fact that we even talk about them is ridiculous. I have done more research on this. What I wanted to know was what is behind me and others who have an acute psychosis saying these disturbing sounding things. I wanted to know what it is at the biological level. My hunch was that it had to do with fact that the human brain has primitive structures at its lower parts. We have structures in our brain that resemble a crocodile's brain. We share common brain structures with many primitive animals, and this is why we have a dark side, meaning this is why we have aggressive impulses, why people enjoy violent movies, why some people have repressed sexual desires that are taboo (or have such desires that are not repressed), etc. It made sense to me that when the brain becomes less regulated and contained that these primitive structures could express themselves in an uninhibited way. What I learned was not far from what I had thought and that I just described to you. I am very tired. My new bedtime is between 3 and 5 pm. I will send you an email to explain later. I'm tired and I was just listening to this audio. I listen to the audios that I send you pretty often. What sticks out to me is how I can sound arrogant when I'm talking. I don't mean to be that way and I don't exactly feel that way. I am a demolished human being. I get arrogant and I curse at you but if you called me to talk to me I would likely be shaking and crying. It also sticks out to me how it doesn't come across what a demolished human being that I am. It may sound insane for me to tell you that I want $10,000,000,000, but if I had a team of experts who I could talk to and who could examine me in depth, they would agree that $10 billion is pennies on the dollar. In the end, it doesn't really matter what I get, as long as I get enough to leave the United States of America and have enough to pay so that I get my way in my new country. It would take at least $3 billion to make life worth living, and that is still very unfair to me. My main priority, aside from my fight with Wells Fargo et al, is my book. It will be a while before I start on it, but I will get it done. There is a lot to be learned from my life and I want the world to know the truth. My brain injury torments me every day. Something about this brain damage makes me feel like I want to die very intensely. It causes a very uncomfortable and torturing pain. I keep having to make sure that I don't get in an argument with my mother. It is extremely dangerous for people to get in arguments with me. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

$3 billion is extremely, extremely cheap. I really should get $10 billion and I might up my offer again. I will have to think about it. Wells Fargo has not one drop of concern for me, but I can't help but to feel bad for Wells Fargo, as insane as that may be. I want them to make it right with me and to then fix their business. Wells Fargo has the raw materials in place to be the greatest bank on earth. A group of credible experts would agree with every last thing that I said, except they would probably think it unhealthy the way I have concern for Wells Fargo, after Wells Fargo kidnapped me and committed this other slew of vicious crimes against me. That probably is unhealthy and I might need to work on that. I want $3 billion, possibly to be upped to $10 billion (or more), and I want at least a good portion of the people involved in this to face consequences. I want people banned from banking. I want property forfeited. I would actually like for people to go to prison too, but that may be something that we end up skipping. I keep mentioning pennies on the dollar. I might, in the future, try to come up with a close to exact amount as to what would be fair. I will state again that no amount of money on earth would be worth it to me, if I had the choice to go back in time. If I come up with such a figure, I will probably send it to you. That way you can put my figures into context. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You probably get aggravated when I keep sending emails. They will never stop as long as I am alive. I am extremely unwell. What has happened to me has damaged me very badly. It is some kind of physical damage to my brain or some kind of terrible and permanent change in my brain chemistry. It feels more like physical damage. I have been depressed before and this is not the same feeling as that. It's nowhere near the same. It is a torturing feeling that makes me extremely sensitive and I often get this feeling like I am kind of tender. It's hard to describe. I am for sure ruined for life. I have been damaged in a way that alters the way that I am composed as a human being. I have less shell shock now it seems. It's been consistently less for several months. This fight has destroyed me. The new thing I have is that I can't do anything for the first 2.5 hours of the day. I think it is from my body being weakened. I take my adderall when I get up and then I lay down and listen to Netflix on my iPad. After about 2.5 hours I will be "woke up" and have energy enough that I can get a little something done. I am never at peace in the way that I used to be before this. I'm always agitated and I always feel uncomfortable, even when I do something and get enjoyment out of it. It is a result of being damaged. It is as if my mind and body know that something is very bad wrong and are trying to alert me. The alerting is in futility. That's the problem. There is no fixing this. My brain is injured. It may sound completely insane for me to ask for $10 billion or $3 billion. It is pennies on the dollar and what you may not realize is that I am so badly damaged that even if I had that much money I would be very tempted to go overseas and die. Belgium is a good place. So is Switzerland. Peru is also a good place to die. And that's probably the best thing to do. The cost to make it right with me is so extreme. Add to that the fact that I'll have every loudmouth politician and every loudmouth in general ranting and raving about how I got this money. I cannot take that. I am in such a terrible condition that it would be too much, when added to all else that I have to deal with (and for the most part cannot). Then we have the shit storm that will be created over the fact that Wells Fargo had me kidnapped, and over all of Wells Fargo's other crimes. That's a pain in the ass and we'd have politicians and all kinds of other people raising hell about that too. If they give me $3 billion they're going to break even for a quarter. If they give me $10 billion they'd post a $7 billion loss (things may be better now. I have to speculate about the numbers). That would send the stock price down the tubes. It's all too much to pay for a life that will be so tortured. I don't see it as likely that the United States of America funds and organizes a trip to Belgium for me. It is much more likely that I am left to fend for myself on my own. I still tell you what I want and what is best. I have no intent to harm myself. My suffering just puts me in a very bad place. I get here often. I typed a much longer message but deleted the rest of it because it was too imposing. I am very sorry for this situation. I wish that I had a happy answer for you. This situation is terribly inconvenient and I get the idea that you want me to make it go away. I cannot. It is impossible. Things really are that bad for me. I am really that damaged. My life is really this much torture. I wish there was a way out too. I will never make it own my own. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am so forceful with my opinions and so seemingly arrogant with my attitude, that it might come across that I'm feeling pretty strong. I am a crushed and demolished human being. I'm upping my estimated probability that this gets in the media in the next 2-3 months to 45% and it's going to be a nightmare. This will be straight from hell, I am very worried. It is pointless. There is no good outcome for me. I will want $10 billion. That's what's fair and it's pennies on the dollar, but what I'm realizing is that nothing will make me happy. I will despise life no matter what. I am too injured and too tortured. I need to go to Belgium or to Switzerland. I'll have to look up both of them in a little more detail to determine which is best. I could also flip a coin. These are countries that have compassion and humanity. I especially like how Switzerland places such a high value on the autonomy of the individual. If this gets in the media, it will be a mix of emotions. I will be happy to expose what has happened to me (that's a very easy thing to do), but it will be the end of my world as I know it. I will be in such torment. I tell you this like you ever do anything. This situation will be a problem for you one day. That's why we need to find some way out. I want something that helps me. If I can make a win/win that's what I'm after. I wish it was possible for me to have a good life that I could be happy about living, but I cannot. That's what I'm realizing. What would help me is to have extra adderall to take. Just maybe life could be worth living then. I get in a zone and can get stuff done. $10 billion might make me have a life that would be worth living. I picture it as sounding completely insane that I mention these figures that I do. I also get a feeling like that you think I'm up to something nefarious. I can imagine this impression being created. I have had this feeling for a long time, the feeling that you think I'm being anything but honest with you. It is a mistake if you care at all about what's right. I speak the literal truth that I see and what I think. I do this extremely reliably. There are not many exceptions. I place an irrational value on truth and honesty, I think. Most others do not act as I do as it relates to this. The way my life is designed is that everything confirms what I say, in the end. I have very accurate perceptions and very accurate intuitions. I am careful and scientific in my thinking and I put a lot of effort into saying things that are accurate (saying things that are accurate is a very hard thing to do. It is so incredibly easy to be wrong, to jump to conclusions, etc. I've caught myself doing this a lot in the past about 2 or 3 months. I'm still above the bar.) I speak so much truth and I'm right such a huge percentage of the time. My version of what's happened and everything about my life will be vetted. It is inevitable. If I get some credible experts on this, they will confirm that $10 billion is pennies on dollar. I will have a consensus among many that this is the case. I will get gratification out of having been right the whole time. They will confirm that it was the actions of Wells Fargo and the various entities that Wells Fargo induced into criminal behavior that caused this profound injury to my brain and the related PTSD. I still get the sense that Wells Fargo is trying to deny this, as ridiculous as that is. You do not realize the extent to which you have ruined a human being. I am so profoundly broken and injured. The best thing and the most appropriate thing for me is to be put to death. I get the sense that Wells Fargo still thinks it's game on and that they're playing tactics in the background. It's like it's the same fight and the same situation that we've been on the whole time. This is fine and I can understand it. I continue to obsessively contact other victims and other people with grievances, and to push my campaign. What Wells Fargo may not realize, actuality what they almost certainly do not realize, is that things are different. I'm not who I used to be and my situation is extremely dire. It's not a matter of winning anymore. It's not the same fight and I'm wearing down and I'm almost certainly going to die. If it is brought to the public's awareness just how badly you have ruined a human being, it just may be a game changer. It is a terrible, terrible thing. My self Control is terrible. I have extremely little. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

As of about the past week, I have a new impairment. I get up and take my adderall, and it takes me 2 and a half hours before I have the energy to do anything. This is from my body being weakened, I think. It is also probably from my overly sedentary lifestyle. That is making it worse, I am sure. This apartment we live in is tiny and I don't have room to do anything. My bowflex free weights are at my building in TN and so is my bench. They are probably gone now. That building is getting robbed over and over, the same as the abandoned old house above it has been for years. 98% of my books are in there, and so this is like everything that I worked my whole life for is being taken away from me. I loved those weights and I loved my books. I can't afford a storage building for them. It's expensive and I don't make much with disability. I also have cut my losses, mentally, as much as it hurts. If I can get something out of this fight, I can buy all my books back and my weights too. That's too much to ask however. When someone pays the price for Wells Fargo's conduct, it is paid in full. I am extremely tormented right now. I am tormented so much of the time. I'm very worried that social security is going to take my disability away. I haven't been diligent in conveying to my doctor how impaired that I am. I can't exactly help it. I am unable to manage my life. My aunt, that paid for Wells Fargo's brain scan, I talked to her the other day, for the first time in a long time. She takes care of 3 adopted great grandchildren and is retired. She told me, on this most recent call, how much she gets from social security retirement. It is $397 a month. I hope Wells Fargo enjoys that brain scan that she paid for.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm very sorry that I'm so harsh and so blunt. I don't know any other way to be when I explain some things to you. I used to believe in the United States Department of Justice so much. I wish so badly that I could believe in you again. You have hurt me so badly that I have trouble doing anything but feeling pain when I think of you. You do not know how hurt that I am. I'm arrogant in a lot of my audios, and I'm also quite frequently a little bit of a dick. I speak bluntly and I have a tendency to tell you off. You have made a mistake. Wells Fargo has made a mistake. You have done something terrible to me. There is no longer a good outcome for me. My outcomes have to be thought of comparatively. There is better and worse but not good. My audios have me sounding arrogant and also, just listening to them, it is easy to picture me as being just fine. I am a demolished human being. I still get the sense that you do not realize this. I get the sense that if someone asked you about me, you wouldn't say "he's a demolished human being. He is ruined in the same sense that a robot that has been repeatedly bashed with a hammer is ruined. He is profoundly impaired and he is not fit to live with people." What I ask you to please understand that what I just wrote is actually the case. That is it exactly. This is reality. I get the sense that you have an extreme resistance to accepting and taking in this reality. It is like, for you, this is a reality that just cannot be, and I get this same sense for the rest of what I say. I am so destroyed that if you give me $10 billion dollars, it is unlikely that I will even smile. It is the same for $100 billion or $200 billion. The only time I ever smile is when I laugh or sometimes when I feed our dog blackie snacks. I hardly ever laugh either. I probably laugh about 2 to 6 times in a typical week and other than that I might smile once or twice a every two weeks. Some things online make me laugh, like Nick Adams on Twitter with his paper straws video and his Tweet that mocks a brand name butter substitute. My laughs are very short lived and when I'm laughing I do not escape this state of being demolish and demoralized. It is like a it is a taboo for me to have hope in life or to see any good in life. My mind has been closed off to such things, it's like the place where those used to exist is no longer there. It is like it is dead. It is like I am dead. The facts are exactly as I state them. What I communicate is reality. I'm not fully sure of how much that you get this. I tend to think that this all sounds insane to you. I would imagine that this figure of $10 billion is from Pluto to you, and it probably arouses some suspicion. You may be tempted to see me as a dishonest predator, when I throw this figure out there. I can imagine this perception being created. What you must realize is that I am extremely honest and straightforward in dealing with you. I'd put my honesty with you at 99.5% or maybe 99.75%, or possibly a little higher. The high ratio is due to the fact that I've sent you a million communications, and I am so extremely honest. Any behavior that is to even a tiny degree dishonest gets massively drowned out by my other 45,000 words and 235 hours of audios. You seem to have a fruity idea that I'm dishonest and deceitful. That's also a terrible and counterproductive way of looking at things. I get the idea that you have this idea from your past behavior. This fruity idea may not be there anymore. $10 billion is pennies on the dollar and if I had an independent group of experts they would agree. The general population is also likely to agree. Listening to me is the one thing that you will not do, and it is also the only thing that could have saved you. Listening to me is still your best bet. The probability is that you will get the best outcome by doing that. We are now at the point that it may not save you. I suffer so extremely. At the current moment, I can tell you that if I had $10 billion, I would still be extremely tempted to go to a more humane country and be put to death. More humane countries most notably includes Belgium and Switzerland. The Netherlands is another one. The reason that I say that this may not save you is that I picture you as having some kind of vested interest in this bank not becoming a murderer and being publicly known as such. It doesn't seem that you would care if this bank murdered me, as long as no one knew. I also get the sense that you would murder me over this bank's conduct. But you getting found out and the bank being a publicly known murderer at the same time is not an outcome that you want. And it may not be that you consider it murder for me to go overseas and escape this terrible pain that I spend so much of my time living in. But still yet, it would be a horrible consequence of this bank's conduct. People would feel bad for me, and rightly so. If I get $10 billion, I will say that the bank did all that it could do and I will wish it well, if these people will just leave me alone. I also want people involved in this punished. But that's the best that I can do and I am not sure that I will ever be able to forgive you or any of the people involved in this. That would still be better than nothing. I also would probably try to exert my will and keep living. I would probably feel a need to try for the bank since they did what they could to make it right. I would not guarantee anything though. For instance, right now I feel torment and I want to die. If I had $10 billion, I would try to make living tolerable by living a life that consists of some combination of a form of materialism, hedonism, and helping people. I really like helping people and I get some happiness out of retail therapy. Hedonism is a distraction and I would be moderate with my hedonism and I would live a limited life. I need very badly to be by myself for almost all of the time. The people who ever come in my house would need to be debriefed and to understand how to deal with me. I feel like I am a potentially dangerous person as a result of the damage that I have been done. I can maintain this situation safely for the rest of my life, if people will just listen to me. I worry about social security yanking my income once I start writing my book. If I am forced to try to work again someone is likely to get hurt. Either that or I end up roadkill. That's an example of what I mean when I say that people need to listen to me. When I implore social security to understand my condition, I need them to focus real hard and pay attention to what I say. I need them to absorb it and take it to heart. What people tend to do instead is to treat me like I don't matter and not even attempt to absorb the words that I say. This makes my life hell and I am subjected to prolonged periods of hell that could have been avoided by people listening to me the first time. I'm getting mad thinking about this. I've got to stop typing. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Looking at this again, it is still crammed full of my genuine thoughts. The part about me being a ruined human being and the part about it being a silly thing to think that I'm not honest, those parts are very accurate. I do have a feeling like it would be dangerous for me to live with people or work with people. I do think that Belgium is a more humane country. So is Switzerland and the Netherlands. $10 billion is pennies on the dollar. Experts would agree. I need you to help me. I cannot afford to not get anything out of this fight. I at least need enough money to move to another country and live a life there. I also want to pay some of the people that I caused pain when I was a child. This includes this girl I told you about and peers that I bullied and tormented in school. The girl I told you about hasn't been caused any lasting pain by me, according to everyone that I've talked to. I still want to give her some money. I want to tell her that I'm sorry for me and I'm also sorry for the people who don't care to say that they're sorry. $10 billion is pennies on the dollar. A kindhearted man has been murdered for no reason. Why did you do this to me? Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am extremely honest. People do need to listen to me. Here is a video I made 4 months ago. <https://youtu.be/s8a6tzkwyfI> At this point I have called the following: 1. In inducing atrium health (Shirley) into crime to get my records, Wells Fargo was after the records from the hospital I was at when I was 18.2. Wells Fargo does this as part of an exercise of reality denial, where Wells Fargo denies that Wells Fargo made a mistake in looking into my past and instead commits more intrusions into my life.3. Wells Fargo would be making attempts to get my healthcare records from the hospital that I was at when I was 18.4. Upon getting my records from the hospital that I was at when I was 18, Wells Fargo can use the disturbing sounding (and to someone with the proper expertise, completely harmless) things that I said to construct a narrative about- "we started to see signs that he might be dangerous." 5. I state that this claim is an absurd exercise of reality denying and a total load of shit; I state that I am not a dangerous person, and that the claim that I am is ridiculous. Let's go over these one a time: Item #1- the justice department knows this one for a fact, one way or another, did Wells Fargo aim to get my records from the hospital that I was at when I was 18? Was this the goal of inducing Shirley at atrium into crime? Wells Fargo has confided the answer to this question to you. I suspect that the answer is yes. You know that my suspicion is correct, don't you? I'll mark this one as a yes. I'm right for this one. Item #2- Does Wells Fargo deny that Wells Fargo made a mistake in looking into my past? Or did Wells Fargo tell the justice department "we made a big mistake and looked into his past. We had no legal right to do this or justification for doing this"? The answer here is that they denied that they made a mistake. We have another yes, don't we? For the second part, did Wells Fargo make further intrusions into my life? This is another yes. They got my healthcare records from when I was 18. Previous to this they wanted the Mobile Crisis counselors to procure my diagnosis. So far I haven't missed a yes. Item #3- this is an easy answer. Another yes. They were after those records. This is evidenced by the fact that they (most likely) gave the justice department a copy of them, or at the very least showed them to the justice department. Item #4- tell me, US DOJ, did Wells Fargo indeed give you a narrative that sounds a little like, or maybe a lot like, what I have told you about so many times, and that I reference in this item? I'll answer this one for you, and you tell me if I'm right. The answer is yes, and I'm right. Were the things that I said completely harmless? According to a slew of many, many doctors who saw those records over a period of nearly 11 years, yes they were. The doctors and Broughton sent me home and not one medical professional who saw those records ever recommended that I be sent back to broughton or any hospital over those records. In fact, with one exception, not one medical professional to see those records ever brought up the things on those records as much as one single time. The total number of medical professionals to legally see those records is easily over a dozen. We have another yes. It's all yeses across the board thus far. Item #5- what do you think the answer for this one is? What else would it be? Of course this is all bullshit, just like I say that it is. Wells Fargo invades my privacy when I'm 37 years old. I had been out of the hospital for over 18 years. What did I ever do that would justify calling me dangerous, in those 18 years? Further, what the hell makes Wells Fargo think that the people at Wells Fargo are qualified to and have the appropriate expertise to determine if someone is dangerous? What the hell gives Wells Fargo the idea that people with a history of treatment for mental health are dangerous people? This is bigotry. There is nothing dangerous about me, dead zero, full stop. End of story. Wells Fargo didn't see any signs that I might be dangerous because there are no signs that I'm dangerous, because I'm not a dangerous person. This reverse engineered bullshit narrative is a half-assed excuse that Wells Fargo comes up with to deny reality and to weasel out of and justify a crime spree, so that Wells Fargo do as it pleases without real consequences, as Wells Fargo is accustomed to doing. Will you concede that we have more yeses for this item? I called every last bit of this, blindfolded and often in advance, with nothing to go by except a fishy phone call and a suspect meeting with some counselors. If I don't see what has happened very clearly, and if I'm not right, how did I so accurately predict every last bit of this? It's all a load of crap. Getting those healthcare records didn't score a single point for Wells Fargo. It just adds one more crime (or possibly multiple crimes) to the list of crimes that this bank has committed against me. I felt so powerful when I was catching Wells Fargo in these crimes in 2019 and early to mid 2020. Among the 10s of thousands of messages that I sent the LA Times was one that read "these thugs should have let me barbecue them directly instead of hiding behind poor little Jenny." I believed so much in the justice department. I dreamed so much of the day you would come into the situation and hold these people accountable. I would get my dignity back and these people would pay. I pictured at first that I would have HHS, the F.B.I., multiple divisions of the US DOJ, and the NC SBI coming on to the scene. I thought that you would be appalled by this vicious abuse of a kindhearted man, for no reason. I pictured the look on the faces of the people at Atrium Health, as one car from one agency, followed up by another car from another agency, and so on pulled up to their facility. I pictured the people at Wells Fargo getting pulled in for an interview, and some of them possibly leaving in handcuffs if they lied to you the way they had lied to me over and over. All the people at my apartment complex would see the men in F.B.I. jackets and the people from other agencies coming to my unit. They would realize that what I had been saying the whole time was true. It would be insane, and I would be the center of attention. It would be all over the news, and people would hear about my brilliant criminal investigation. It hurts so bad to look back and those dreams. It's like you resurrected my soul just so that you could murder it one more time. I look back at my life and how cruel other kids and I could be. There is no cruelty like the cruelty of life and the cruelty of children, except the cruelty of the cold-hearted conmen and murderers at the United States Department of Justice. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I want to make one thing clear- I don't owe any of the thugs on the other end an apology for my healthcare records. Even MSN is circulating this bullshit. These articles say that "federal regulators are considering a national shutdown of Wells Fargo." That's nearly verbatim. This would defy everything that I have learned about how this works since I looked into this thing with me. If that were the case, it would be very sad to me. I would think about my office people and about all the potential that I thought the bank had and about how the customers would be hurt. I always care about the customers at every job that I have. I have said horrible things about you online. What I say isn't too far from the truth, as far as I can tell. I am extremely unwell and for the past 2 days I have been extremely tired. The tiredness is from having to ride with my mother to get my medicine the day before yesterday. I damn near had a heart attack over and over. It is from my hyper vigilance and possibly from my heart being weakened. I never wanted to be your enemy and this is all your fault how things have turned out. You will be found out. I put the odds at at least 95%, closer to 99%. I asked this bank to have a conversation. They responded my hitting me with a terrorist superpower criminal assault. Then I built a case. Then I wrote a complaint and sent it to you in an email that said "I need your help and tell me how that I can help you." This is all I ever did to you. I have trouble seeing you as good people in any sense. I don't know why anyone would do this. That doesn't mean that I won't work with you in the future if things go to shit. I want 10 billion dollars for what has been done to me. I will wish you well and wish Wells Fargo well, but I will not shake your hand, neither one of you. I want this bank to be someone else's problem. $10 billion will not make me well and I will probably not even smile. I will be mildly happy most likely, however. The day will likely come when you stop receiving emails from me, but it will not come as long as I am alive. I used to be so incredibly strong and that is why I have made it this far. I am wearing down all of the time. I have never met people as cruel as you. My ex friend Kermit, who tortures animals and who has raped half a dozen or more underaged girls against legal consent and who raped one child against psychological consent, would not let me suffer like this, if it were in his power to stop it. My dad wouldn't let me suffer like this either, if he had the power to stop it. He wouldn't let anyone suffer like this. My dad was selfish and he was obsessed with money. His obsession with money, combined with this chronic lack of it, is what drove his self-centered and cruel behavior. You give my dad $100 million in cash or $200 billion like Wells Fargo has and he would turn in to the kindest man on earth. He would give to the needy and the poor and he would dump money into churches. He would have gotten a new home for this poor old woman that he once lived with and that his mother tortured. Wells Fargo makes a ridiculous claim that I am a psychopath. This is not true. I have personally known more actual psychopaths than most people have. I have known of many more that I did not meet, like my infamous cousin named Jerry. They are not as bad people as you are. I would 100 times rather be a psychopath than be people like you. I will go into the ground as the person that I made out of myself, and I will be proud of that person. I live in terrible pain and torment, and it will be a sad day. There is no amount of money that I would take to be people like you. I would much rather live in suffering and torment and go into the ground as a disabled broke man with nothing.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I continue to suffer as the depraved conmen and murderers at the justice department hide behind an email that they never answer. This reality that you so persistently deny hurts like hell. The day that Wall Street becomes a murderer is in the horizon, and I expect you to do nothing about it, other than to coddle these indecent murderers, for whom you seem to have such affection and adoration. My mother will cry so hard when I die. She won't have money to bury me, and the thought of having me cremated will be horrifying to her. She will reach out to her criminal accomplices at Wells Fargo and the justice department, screaming and begging for money. I wonder if they will give it to her, after she helped them in their crimes. It will be a terrible day for my mother and things will only get worse. Would it make sense to you if I only had bad things to say about you? Would it make sense that I would have no trouble finding horrible things to say about you, things which I would have plenty of evidence for and that others would believe?-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I suffer like this while this bank sits on $200 billion cash. I suffer like this because the justice department and Wells Fargo are criminals and because the justice department and Wells Fargo refuse to admit that Wells Fargo has made a mistake. This is the price that I pay, so that the people at Wells Fargo don't have to admit that they have been wrong one time in their lives. And you call me selfish. You are the bad guys. I am the good guy. If you can't see this, you are completely missing the point and living on Pluto. You've been on Pluto a good while now. If you want, I'll sign a paper that says the people that run these scams on me at Wells Fargo are deities. This is what they think of themselves and I'm going to die over the notion that they are anything less than this. I offered to settle this with you for AU girl and some money. Then I offered to settle for a salary from Wells Fargo, where I get paid enough to pay my bills and keep my life in Charlotte. Then I offered to settle this for $8 million. Then I offered to settle this for $3 billion. Then I offered to settle this for $10 billion. All of these figures are at a huge discount, compared to what a jury would give me in a fair trial. I will never get a fair trial due to the extreme criminality of the Justice department and of Wells Fargo. You are murderers whose cruelty has no parallel. The rest of the world will see this. You have no decency and you are a bunch of cowards. You will not be able to hide from the decency of other people. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You could have saved my life for $8 million. Then $3 billion. Then $10 billion. It is very possible that my death will be the end of Wells Fargo. People are funny and they may not even care about how cruelly I have been murdered. But on the other hand, this may be the straw that breaks the camels back. It is very possible that people don't want to do business with a lying, stealing, cheating bank that murdered a kindhearted man like me. You almost certainly have a PR campaign in a can, for the circumstance that I die. In this, you will aim to defame a dead man so that you can save your own reputation. You will feel really pumped up by the fact that I am dead and will not be here to defend myself when you spew your filth. My being mentally ill pumped up the people at Wells Fargo and the people at atrium health about what they can get away with. Then the fact that I am disabled pumped them up that much more. The fact that I am disabled really pumps up the justice department too. You're really charged up about how much you can get away with. The ultimate testosterone surge for you indecent chickenshit cowards will be the day that I die. Then you can really get away with anything, or at least that's what you'll tell yourselves. For this I will be writing my book. It is what I will leave behind and it will defend me. You and your conduct will be brought into the light and you will melt like the soulless, inhuman vampires that you are. You cannot hide from the truth, and you cannot escape the decency of other people. The truth and the decency of other people are your greatest enemies and what you fear the most. I send you emails and audios where I tell you off. I will often be arrogant in my demeanor. When you think of someone who is disabled, you tend not to think of someone who tells you off, is condescending, is arrogant, and is intimidating in the way he puts reality in your face and in the intensity with which he comes for you. What I can say there is that I am who I am, and this will never change. I am very severely disabled and I am very, very unwell. My attitude, demeanor, etc. can also detract from the tortured life that I have lived and from the profound suffering that I experience, and from what a compelling story that I have to tell. I will again say that I am who I am, and this is what I have to work with. It doesn't change a thing. I started a little on my book about 3 weeks ago. I cried so hard and I didn't even get past the first page. I will cry a river of tears by the time it is said and done, to add to the ocean of tears that I have cried since Wells Fargo murdered my soul and since the comen at the justice department resuscitated it just barely enough so that they could murder it again. You may not see your cruelty. It may be invisible to you. You are extremely depraved and god only knows what goes on in your warped, delusional mind. What I can tell you is that your cruelty will not be invisible to others. My story will ring of truth, and there will be a nonstop chorus of people popping out of the woodwork saying that things are exactly as I describe them. I will be the good guy and I just might go down in history for what I can teach people through my life's story. You can fight back if you want. You can write your own compelling story, about being an indecent whore to Wall Street. You can tell people about how you poach a bunch of poor people and then post it on Facebook. You can tell people about how you live in a fantasy world and adulate yourself endlessly. The thugs at Wells Fargo can write a compelling story about their pathological self-preservation instinct, where they're such a bunch of chickenshits and so focused on saving their own skin that they hide behind a pitiful little woman with a mental deficit and have her committing their crimes for them. This is the conclusion of the set of facts that I have to work with. That set of facts doesn't favor you at all. I have a real hard time thinking of one single fact that is in your favor. It profoundly won't take me more than 100 hours to write my book. I've got ideas for several books. I have reflected on my life so much that there won't be much to think about. I will put it on paper. I move at such a snails pace that it will take me many months to accumulate 100 hours, but I will get it done. My suffering has went down a good bit since I first started typing this. I get extremely angry with you when I suffer and I will not last much longer. I am a ruined human being. Right now I feel like a man trapped in a cage in the jungle. I get this feeling a lot and it makes me a dangerous person. A surefire way to trigger it is to raise your voice to me. Anyone who raises their voice to me is risking their life in a serious way. For sure they need to shut the fuck up after the first time, if they survive that. Most likely they will die after the first time, unless they immediately leave the apartment. Right now I'm by myself and I'm feeling extremely hostile. I am feeling a hyper vigilance and an emotional pain based hostility. There is something very bad wrong with me. This hostility is something that I cannot help and I cannot control and it is very hard to explain. I am not in control of myself but at the same time I picture myself as having an ability to be calculating, if needed. I'm not sure. What I mean there is that, say for example I'm in a gas station and someone belittles me. I will not be in control of myself but I can still think long term. Here I am using the word long term in a different sense. I don't mean a week or a day or a year or 5 years. What I'm saying is that I am not locked into carrying out the violence immediately, like it's a reflex. I can wait for the right time to make my move. Like say the person is bigger than me and I don't have a knife or other weapon to grab. What I picture happening is this emotional pain will persist and I will be kind of focused. Also note that anyone who pays anything like close attention to me will be able to tell that there is something very bad wrong with me. This mental state I get in is very different and my physiology and the way I behave and the look I get in my eyes, all of this would stand out. I picture that someone who is watching me would know that something very bad is wrong with me and that something bad is about to happen. They would recognize that I am contemplating violence. But to get back to the narrative, being belittled or yelled at causes this extreme emotional pain that is accompanied by a powerful drive to kill the person who caused it. I am still able to be strategic, and what I picture happening at a gas station is that I would run over the person with my car. I would wait for them to exit. This pain would be sustained as I wait for the person. I would want them to suffer as much as possible, and I would be likely to try to prolong their death if possible, like maybe run over their legs over and over, then run over top of their torso. This pain that I feel makes me want to hurt people very badly. It's not just murder. It is a general violent impulse to massacre the hell out of the person. I am still ultimately not in control of myself. It may seem that I am, as there is an element of planning and calculated action. This pain has to be discharged. To not do that is not an option. It is unbearable. I am glad that there isn't anyone in here with me now. Right now I feel like it wouldn't take much provocation. This bank did this to me. Why? All I asked for was a conversation and now I'm a ruined human being. I got a little hostile on a friend the other day when he sent me a text message. Nothing remotely like what I've described to you. He sent me an innocuous text that just happened to trigger me. It doesn't take much. It wasn't anything that would make me want to kill him. Not even close. But I explained to him my hostility and how I feel. I'll copy and paste it here: I can maintain my situation indefinitely if I have money and my own place. I can spend the majority of my time alone and I can debrief anyone who visits me on my condition. I can tell you for 100% fact, that if I were living with anyone except my mother right now, someone would already be dead. My mother almost never asserts her needs or gets angry and she's not here much due to working so much. Any other roommate would be very irritated by my constant complaining of my torment and suffering and by my peculiar habits, like pacing the floor a lot and being up at all hours of the day and night. They would complain and gripe and raise their voice to me and I would kill them. I am so incredibly hostile that if I had to, to get back at them, I would burn down the place with both me and them in it. Here is a second text: It is not the kind of hostility that most people are familiar with or can understand. It is not the kind of hostility that an abusive husband has towards his wife, or that an abusive man will tend to have towards people in general. It is an emotional pain based hostility. Imagine being trapped in a wooden cage in the jungle, by some depraved and cruel men who would torture you daily through the holes in your cage. Imagine that they taunt you and poke you with wooden spears and other objects, and your cage being so small that you cannot dodge the sharp instruments that they poke through your cage. You feel helpless and you are continually humiliated. Over time the humiliation and the helplessness and the demeaning attitude of your captors will have permanently changed you. You will have an incredible hostility out of feeling continually threatened and abused. That's exactly how I feel and it gets extremely acute when I'm in the presence of people. The least little thing they do will inflame me. It causes this extreme and very tormenting feeling of emotional pain and humiliation, and I feel like the only way to cure that feeling is to murder the person causing it.

This is what I go through while you minimize what has happened to me, deny this bank's responsibility for it, and massacre me with crime. Why are you this way to me? Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You never get a full dose of how bad off that I am because when I make my audios when I'm doing good. This is by design. There is no way that I could make audios right now. There is the added fact that audios are one way. You have little ability to provoke me. This is unless I think of something you do that pisses me off, and that's not even the kind of provocation that I'm talking about. In that case I would yell and scream at you. It would be different if you were here and you belittled me in any way. Say you are carrying a gun like law enforcement typically do. I would start scheming as to how I could get your gun or as to how I could sneak and get a knife to stab you in the back as you leave. If you belittled me in a big way, like a deliberate mocking, it would be worse. I would try to hide my mental state, as to not alert you to my intentions, but it is very likely that you would notice that something is off about me. My neighbor was calling me names as I walked outside, many months ago. I had a reflex action where I start to yell and curse at him. The way I looked when I did that would give you the impression that I am mentally retarded in some way. A common element to all of this is that it is visibly apparent that something is wrong with me. But I walked in the apartment and my hostility went down. That surprised me. When I knew that I would be moving here, I was very worried that I would kill him within the first few days. He was a bastard back before I was disabled and I would visit here. I thought that if he started his shit things would fly south. I can tell you that right now wouldn't be a good time for him to start his shit. The business as usual thing to do with someone like me is to permanently institutionalize them. To me this is not fair and I know for 100% fact that I can manage this situation. I do pretty good living with mom and I would do even better if I lived by myself. "The business as usual thing to do with someone like me is to permanently institutionalize them" - this is one reason why, in the long run it is a necessity that I die, meaning die prematurely. I am in terrible torment as it is. I miss my apartment in Charlotte and I suffered terribly even in there. It would be unbearable to be at some facility for the next 30 years. Those places are hell even when I was healthy. If I get help from you things can be different. Most likely I will still want to die, but I can have something good in life in the meantime. There is something about my intuition, where my intuition is very accurate in some things, and I pick up on stuff that no one else would. For instance, these stress based heart injuries from 2021, the doctor told me that it was not that. He said that it couldn't be, because it would show up on the tests that he ran. I knew that he was wrong. I got home and looked it up, and I found a medical website that explained that your tests might still come back normal. Assuming that these injuries leave any kind of bruise or mark, if I had died around that time, they could do an autopsy and they would find several of them. Another example is this thing that I have with my heart now, where I seem to be teetering on the edge of heart disease or maybe have it, I called this in August 2021. I could feel this stress I was under frying my body. I knew that if I lived to see the near term future, I would have premature health problems. This thing with my heart is only the beginning. I would say that any and all organs that I have that are sensitive to stress have aged 25 to 40 years since April 2019. They particularly aged during August 2021. I would bet you anything you wanted to bet that I could be cut open and this would be confirmed. I got off on a tangent, but the point is that there is something different about my intuition. It is because I have the quality of genius, I am almost certain. I have read a lot about geniuses and I have been called this my whole life. I am not being vain. It's just a fact. There is this book called the hidden qualities of genius (fact check me on that. It may be the hidden traits or the hidden secrets or something else. It is hidden (insert some word here) of genius) It describes me perfectly, as does a lot of the other things I have read. Some things that hidden book has, in particular, peg me far too accurately to be anything like a coincidence. Another thing it talks about is how geniuses tend to be rotten, self-centered people, who run over the people in their lives like they're roadkill. That's exactly like me and I have to try really hard to not be that way. It's like I have this kind heart and I like to help people, but at the same time I'm so incredibly self-centered. I got on another tangent, but one intuition that I have had in the past week or so is that my brain is broken and it can't figure out why. To make an analogy, I had kidney stones many years ago. It hurt like hell. I caught one of them in a mesh wire net type of thing they gave me. It was shaped kind of like a spoon, except instead of solid metal it had this kind of mesh wire. This kidney stone was tiny. So tiny that it was hard to see it. The nurse told me that I was not supposed to have my uriter blocked with anything, and when something gets in there, my body will put me in hellacious pain to let me know that something is wrong. What's happened to me is that my brain is injured and it's constantly trying to fix itself. It's like I have this automatic, obsessive focus on seeking out how to be better. Right now I focused on 10 billion dollars. What I sense is that, if I get 10 billion dollars, I will still be in the condition of feeling like I need something. It's like I will be constantly driven to find some way to be well, and it will be one thing after another. It is futile, because my brain will never be fixed. People who abuse MDMA will often develop a craving for chocolate. This is believed to be because the molecular structure of a chemical found in chocolate resembles the molecular structure of a chemical in the brain that gets depleted from MDMA abuse. I have something similar, except my brain is having trouble figuring out what it is supposed to crave. This is because there is nothing to crave. My brain is irreparably broken. This thing that I told you about my intuition being accurate and seeing things that others do not, it has occurred to me, as I have been typing this, that I could research this thing about broken brains online. It is very probable that what I describe has been discovered by some scientist or doctor. This is the kind of thing that happens to me quite often. I nail some condition of reality and I do it seemingly blindfolded. I came up with the concept called Laplace's demon when I was 12 years old. I did it just thinking. I didn't call it Laplace's demon, but it was the exact same concept. I had never learned anything about Laplace's demon at that time. At age 15 or 16, when I first started playing pool, I was laying in bed obsessing over how to aim, and I came up with an aiming system called the ghost ball system. I had never heard a thing about it. Had no clue it existed, and I came up with the literal exact same thing. Only difference is that I didn't call it the ghost ball system. I had no name for it. Wells Fargo wanted me to talk to a neuroscientist. If they still have this guy on the line, show him what I have typed. I bet you anything it will make sense to him (or her). I talk to you as if you care. You don't do anything to stop the ruthless cruelty of this bank. You just look for what you can use for your own purposes, which do not take into consideration at all how much I suffer, or take me into consideration at all. I sent you an email where I asked you "what can I do to help you." I sent you multiple such emails, if I recall right. I also sent you a letter saying the same. Wells Fargo never offered to help you (except in executing your crimes). Wells Fargo disrespectfully commits crimes right under your nose and lies to you about wanting to do better. Your priorities seem to be backwards and you seem to have no self-respect as it relates to this bank. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I keep telling you that I'm going to die. This may come across as some sort of blackmail. It is not. Your reaction may be "then go get help and treatment." This reaction is based on a misunderstanding and a desire to outsource the consequences of this bank's behavior to someone else. The outsourcing the cost is nothing new. Not much need to talk about that. The misunderstanding is the idea that there is any help for me. My brain is broken and it causes me terrible suffering. A brain is not like a car. They can't go in and fix what is damaged and then put it back together. Then the fact that I am handicapped makes everything so much worse. I spend so much time in terrible suffering. My living circumstances are also terrible. Life is torture for me. What has the potential to help this is money. Money will not fix my broken brain. Money will allow me to have better living conditions. Money will allow me to pay people to do all the things that I cannot do for myself. Money will allow me to buy nice things and do other things that offset my suffering. Money will allow me to help people, which I like to do. Even if I have money, life will be extremely hard. It will still consist of so much torment. But money will make it better. I want $10 billion. If I get less I will take it. A big priority is writing my book. If I get less than $10 billion, I will quite probably move to another country and then write my book. I'm not sure. I'd say for absolutely sure, if I get less than $3 billion. The benefit of a smaller amount of money would be that I would be able to move to a better country that isn't governed by such a bunch of depraved criminals and that is more humane. I have thought of writing to the government of Switzerland and asking them to pay for me to move down there, in exchange for the copyright to my book. I would also need them to pay for my living expenses. I think the people in that country might care about me. I could go on their news networks and share my experience. My book will also be something else. My book will defend me. It will explain me. It will tell the story of my life, lived in so much pain. It will tell the story of Wells Fargo murdering my soul and of the depraved murderers at the justice department pounding me with crime when my body was about to die. I will talk of the extreme and inhuman prejudice of the justice department and of the federal reserve. You offer so many examples of everything that it is worth aspiring not to be. I do not know how to explain your corruption. It is quite a phenomenon. I talk badly about you all the time in my emails. This may upset you or come across as not nice. When I say something and then you don't like it, you are skipping a step. The step in the middle is to consider the possibility that I have a reason to say what I say. And also to consider that what I say may be true. You might want to consider changing. But I would guess you skip all of that and just don't want to hear anything critical. If the tables were turned and it were me, all of this criticism wouldn't bother me at all. I would care about you, as the person who is suffering. I would realize that my conduct is extremely immoral and inhuman. You could hit me with a bunch of slaps in the face like I do you, and my response would be to tell you I'm sorry and do whatever I could to help you. I'm paying the price for this bank's conduct. I'm paying it in full, and it is a thankless job. The global economy goes on at my expense, and there is nothing little enough that I can ask for that is not too much to ask. I asked for $5,000 multiple times in 2021. I couldn't even get that, when it would have lifted a mountain of stress off of me. All I have to show for my fight for justice is a brain scan that was got for Wells Fargo, that my poor aunt paid for.

Everything I say is exactly correct, with very few exceptions. If there is something that I say that doesn't make sense to you, that's you and not me. If you don't think I'm telling the truth about something, you are very badly mistaken. Failing to take what I say as the gospel truth is a very bad mistake. My PTSD is very severe and has caused a terrible injury to my brain. This thing I told you, about my brain trying to fix itself in futility, this is almost certainly true. I think it will resonate with my neurologist when I go see one. I can feel my impairment every minute of every day. You may also find it offensive that I say I have the quality of genius. This is also exactly true. I'm very much zeroed in on reality in just about everything that I say.

This time I'm railing at you for not prosecuting Donald Trump. I am of the opinion that the chances you file charges for him over anything listed in the Jan 6th report is dead zero. I've said this a lot and I await your announcement proving me right. I have found myself in the mix with very powerful people + presiding over the end of the world. I never wanted either of these things. I just went to work for a bank and it did me wrong. Then I asked to have a conversation. Then I sought justice. All 3 of these were big mistakes, the first one in particular. I never saw any of it coming.I am a massacred and demolished human being. I'm dealing with some very powerful and potentially extremely fruity people. I have no idea what goes on in the minds of the people at the justice department. I sent my letter to the OIG and it was overall nice and respectful. I don't know how far off into Pluto the justice department has went. Wells Fargo is completely off the charts. I am also uncertain as to the extent that the justice department is bigoted and prejudiced against me over the illegally obtained healthcare records that Wells Fargo showed you. The prejudice and the fruitiness are my main grievances, along with your despicable criminal abuse of a disabled man. Really tell you off is an inaccurate way to say it. It's much more accurate to say that I'd put the reality of this situation in your face. I don't know how much the justice department regrets that it has to commit these horrible crimes against me. From your perspective, this seems to be necessary, and I don't know if you see it as a necessary evil or just plain necessary. What you are doing is evil and the public will agree when this comes to light. You are going to get found out. The odds of that are extremely high.If you have not made nearly as big a deal out of this as I have, you are way off base. If you have not acknowledged Wells Fargo's culpability in my brain injury and my suffering (it's essentially all Wells Fargo's fault + the various entities that Wells Fargo induced into crime), you are way off. If you for one second entertain any ridiculous notion that Wells Fargo had a "right" to do all of this, and/or that my rights have not been very seriously violated, you are way, way, way off base.The reality of this situation makes all of the above look like the farce that they are.I could have done so much for this bank. I was such an asset. I believe that there was a time that I could have done a lot to help the justice department. It's hard to say. This demeaning criminal abuse has had an effect on me. Whatever the case, I am now a ruined human being and I don't have much to offer to anyone. I am severely handicapped and unfit to be around people. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I used to be so strong and such a badass. I could learn about and master just about anything. Now I am so handicapped and I do think the most likely outcome of my fight for justice is that I end up dying. This situation isn't sustainable. I could not live by myself. I don't make enough money to pay my own rent, electricity, etc. I also am too handicapped to clean or do the other tasks involved in maintaining a place to live. My brain is damaged quite severely.If something were to happen to my mother, I would be homeless in no time. I have told you this before. I'm on a lifeline with my social security backpay, and once it's gone I'm up the creek. I will not make it if you don't help me. I think $10 billion is more than fair but I'll

It's like I'm gasping for air right in front of you and pleading with you for my life, and you do nothing. You are so incredibly cruel. This bank already is a murderer. It has murdered my soul. My body will soon die too, and you don't even care.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

There is no amount of money that would make things ok. I at least want enough to move to another country. You won't do anything for me, but I've told you over and over what I want. I want these people punished too. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I just called the people at the Justice Department a depraved clown troop of conmen and murderers on Twitter about 45 minutes ago. If this sounds like something not nice to do, you may want to consider the condition that I am in. I'm feeling like a man trapped in a cage in the jungle again. It is a horrible feeling. This feeling can be provoked by people treating me less than them. It will go through the roof if someone raises their voice to me. And then it comes to me at times when I'm alone. Right now I am extremely volatile and the last thing that I need is for someone to be in this apartment with me. No one is here now. I have this terrible impulse to be violent. I don't seek out people, but if someone were here, I would have to contain myself, and god help me (and especially them) if they raised their voice to me or disrespected me. This is the result of this demeaning and traumatic stress disorder inducing criminal abuse that I have suffered. I am a ruined human being. My brain is very severely injured. I'm going to die. $10 billion is far too little but I would take it right now. I might up my offer to $30 billion or $40 billion. I don't exactly care if you turn me down (and you will). The bank will likely have to be compelled to pay me, and if it's not compelled I will not get anything. $30 to $40 billion is pennies on the dollar. Every offer I've ever given you is a steal. Right now I'll take $10 billion, but that won't last long. I want $10 billion and I want people involved in this punished. Give me that and I'll wish the bank and the Justice Department well, through gritted teeth, and I won't shake your hand. I will have a record of the pennies on the dollar offers I have given you. I never delete my emails. If you think I'm asking for too much, or that it is absurd that I would ask for these amounts (I can imagine the fruity people on the other end of this thinking such nonsense), you are wrong. You are wrong in an objective sense, most likely. Any third party group of experts, who were not paid to commit crimes by the justice department and/or the various other criminals involved in this, would agree with me. They would just need to know the facts. It would be a unanimous decision. I sit here and speak nothing but truth and pure gospel. The day is likely going to come when you will wish you listened to me. The day that you find out that I have been completely right this entire time is almost certain to come. That's a 99% probability. The rest of the world will know too. You will hang your head in shame, as you should. You seem to be immune from the shame that you should rightfully feel over your despicable actions against me. This immunity is quite possibly dependent on your rotten conduct and your indecent moral cowardice being a big secret. When the light is shined on you and your deeds, you will feel it. I will die having never known what it is like to be in love. I will suffer every single day for as long as I live. I have better days and worse days, but I have no days where I do not suffer. I wish some of these mystery thugs who run these scams for this bank were in here with me right now, and that I had a hunting knife. You have no idea what you've done to me. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

It is not like I'm some kind of lust murderer who gets a kick out of killing people. I am just extremely sensitive to people treating me as less than them. I'm extremely sensitive to any form of aggression or demeaning behavior. My hostility has went down some in the past few minutes. Not a whole lot but I can tell a difference. Now or many minutes ago when I sent you this first message, either one, I could have someone in here with me and it would be safe. Like say I had a pretty woman who was my friend to talk to. They would just have to be debriefed and not raise their voice to me or be disrespectful at all. If these people that are behind this at Wells Fargo were in here, they'd be skating on thin ice. I could try to be nice to them and I would be able to talk to them. Most likely I would yell and scream at them. Where it would go awry is, I picture these people as being arrogant, and they quite obviously think they are worth more as a human being than I am. They would cop an attitude, get haughty, and be disrespectful, and that would be the end of them. This emotional pain that this causes and this tormenting feeling, these two things that cause this hostility, it's very hard to explain, but it is extreme. There is something very bad wrong with me. I will do anything when it hits me, particularly if people don't back down immediately. They keep escalating with more yelling and more disrespect, there is not much of anything that is more dangerous. My hostility is so extreme that if I had to, I would burn down the place with both me and them in it, if that's what it took to get back at someone. What's especially strange is how I picture myself as being able to think ahead to some extent. I guess it's important here to say that I have never had this feeling play out to amount to anything in real life. I am just very good at picturing what would happen. I have a very clear sense of how this works, from the brief times that I've felt it in real life (I've had people raise their voice to others in front of me, and it triggered a similar feeling. This person left the place I was at immediately following that. It wasn't because of me or knowing my condition. They just left on their own accord. Were yelling at someone as they were exiting). I also get a clearer picture when it hits me like it has now. I get hit with this trapped in a cage in the jungle feeling out of nowhere at times when I'm alone. It seems to be related to how long I have been up. It seems to happen when I've been up for over 14 hours. But to go back, there is something extremely bad wrong with me, and I am not in control of myself, but I can still think ahead just a little. That's how I picture it. I am also certain that this thing that is wrong with me is very visibly apparent to others, or it would be if they saw me get in this condition. I have this strange demeanor and strange look in my eyes. I'm getting tired and will explain this later. When I said I wish they were here, I was having memories of this abuse that I have been subjected to. It was amping up my hostility and causing me terrible emotional pain. This pain that I feel is so tormenting and so terrible, and there is this drive to be violent against the people causing it. I need to go to a more humane country and be put to death. That's what this amounts to. You have no desire to help me or to do anything for me over this situation. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams

I had one of my episodes when I sent these messages. This hostility I feel and the way it is provoked is something that bothers me very badly. I got into a state of extreme volatility and hostility yesterday, when I wrote these messages. I can maintain my situation forever. I know how to make this work. I need money so that I can live by myself. The people on the other end are incredibly self-centered. I have thought about you repeatedly in this process and tried to help you. You do not do anything for me and you seem to not think that I matter at all. I am continually tempted to think that somewhere in you there is a desire to do what's right, and that you have some capacity to care about me and the damage you have caused. This is quite clearly a naive delusion. You are willing to let me die, if that is the cost of not admitting that you have made a mistake. That's how selfish you are. And you have no decency. While you're sitting there thinking entirely about yourselves, let me tell you something that is relevant to your pathetic self-absorption- you're going to get found out. Every criminal in this process, from the criminal enterprise that goes by the name Wells Fargo, to the criminals at atrium health, to the wanton and cowardly criminals at the justice department, all of you have made the same mistake and you make it repeatedly. You seem to not profit from past experience. You always think you're going to get away with the next thing. I caught Wells Fargo with a ratio of 1:1. I caught atrium health with a ratio of 1:1. This ratio has been maintained the entire time. No matter how many crimes these people commit, its 1:1 across the board. And somehow you think it will be different with your despicable, cruel, inhuman, and indecent state sponsored cover-up. I offer win-wins. I've offered dozens or scores or hundreds of win-wins. Out of your own pathetic arrogance, you are hell bent on losing. FYI, you may think that there are crimes or other unethical acts that you have gotten away with, because I haven't mentioned them. Dream on dreamers. For instance, I know about your password swiping. I knew about that from the first day and the first time that it happened. You may wonder why I didn't change my password immediately, or rather you probably thought that you got away with it because of this. I was too handicapped with too much to do. In the end, every bit of this will be in the public eye. This is a very likely conclusion of what has occurred. In regards to these emails from yesterday and the similar things I have said, you may wonder what the hell my health problems have to do with you. For one, you caused them. They are your fault and you are responsible for them. For two, damn that's a good question, a good question that the thugs at the justice department didn't ask themselves when Wells Fargo shows them my illegally obtained healthcare records. I have tried over and over to be a team player and to get along with the thugs on the other end. I get sicker and sicker of you as time goes on. I was once willing to defend you, if you would just help me. Instead, you have proven yourselves indefensible. Rest assured that I have competent doctors to handle issues like those that I had yesterday when I sent you those emails. There is no need for you to get involved. No need to despicably abuse the mental health system to cover up your crimes, and to then rob poor people to pay for it. This is who you are. Read the above and tell me how you are this way. I want $10 billion and I want the people involved punished, at least some of them. I'll wish you well and I will not shake your hand. This situation will never be over for me, not until I die. It can be over for you. It sickens me how I have to appeal to your own self-interest, to try to negotiate something. Self-interest is fine. It's just the fact that this is all you have. Self-centeredness and a vulgar arrogance. You need to learn to think about the other person. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

When I say "gotten away with", I mean that you didn't get caught. You obviously get away with everything. Wells Fargo is a terrorist superpower run wild, to the knowledge of the authorities, who are its accomplices. There are no constraints on Wells Fargo's behavior whatsoever, other than the constraints that nature imposes. Wells Fargo is doomed to be subject to the rule of gravity, and Wells Fargo cannot overturn the second law of thermodynamics. Those are two real constraints on Wells Fargo's behavior. If you want to know what Wells Fargo is and is not allowed to do, you don't go to law school; you study physics. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I live in such pain and my life is unbearable and not worth living. I feel my impairment every single day. I have some times that are better times, but it's not worth it. My life is also unsustainable. I will run out of money in the near term future and will be doomed. I cannot manage the affairs of living. My disability income isn't enough to pay for my own place to live, much less pay people to clean for me and do to all else that I cannot do. I have not taken a shower in something like 3 weeks. All the dreams I had in life have been crushed, because I'm too handicapped to make any progress on them. I used to be so strong. I used to be such a beast. Think of it. I fought a bank that outweighed me 200 million to 1. I did so on a budget of $0, as a disabled man. I fought them and I won. The people who are responsible for enforcing the rules turned their guns on me, but I am the rightful winner. What to make of someone that strong? That's who I

Subject: I'm calling you bigots in public

From: Leonard Clinton Williams III [REDACTED]@gmail.com>

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>, civil.feedback@usdoj.gov

I just made a series of tweets on Twitter, where I call Wells Fargo and the Justice Department bigots and, to paraphrase, "prejudiced assholes." This may seem like an odd behavior, or at least one that isn't on the same page with some of my emails to you. On the one hand, I send you emails about how bad I suffer and how bad I need help. On the other, I call you names and criticize you in public. The latter behavior may seem to be not conducive to getting the help that I beg for in the former behavior. It would seem that, maybe, if I wanted your help, I should tell you what great people that you are. Let me explain. For one, I have no idea how to tell you what great people that you are. That would make things very confusing. I don't know what to say after that. It's much easier for me to be honest and speak the facts of the situation. I tell you that I need help, because I need help. I tell you that I suffer incredibly, because I suffer incredibly. I call you bigots and prejudiced assholes, because you are bigots and prejudiced assholes, or at the very least you behave like both of those. You are bigots for many reasons, the common elements to all of them being 1. my harmless mental health issues, which are part of a harmless condition of being that I did not and could not choose. And 2. your attitude towards me based on the aforementioned. You justify committing vicious crimes against me because of my history of treatment for mental health and my harmless condition of being. You further put it in my face, what contempt you have for the mentally ill, by using a despicable tactic where you cover up your crimes by using my mental illness against me, and by how you allow funds intended for the mentally ill and other vulnerable people to pay for your crimes. This bank has such vast resources, and you are so committed to the outcome that it is not to pay for the consequences of its actions, that you allow this vulgarity to ensue. Note that when I say "you", I am sometimes referring to the justice department, sometimes referring to Wells Fargo, and sometimes referring to both collectively. You can infer from the context which of these that it is. This last behavior I describe, where something like $20,000 of money intended for the poor, the vulnerable, and the mentally ill is used to cover-up Wells Fargo's crimes, to the knowledge of and with the approval of the Justice Department, makes it clear who the Justice Department thinks is important and who it does not. The justice department would appear to hold the people at Wells Fargo to be infinitely important, and to hold the rights and wellbeing of the poor, the vulnerable, and the mentally ill to be a side note that warrants exactly 0 consideration. I've got additional reasons to call you assholes and could elaborate a lot more on the charge of bigoted, but it is my bedtime and I'm very tired. I have no idea what fruitiness is ensuing at the justice department. Wells Fargo is digging in its heels with equal or greater force than when it started, and is being as despicable and as cruel as ever. It's possible, but not likely, that the offensive behavior of the justice department is driven by some benign variety of fruitiness, or even that you feel bad about what you've done. Read the above. This is what your behavior says about you. I wish so bad that I had something better to say about you. The odds that this gets put in the media in the next 1 to 3 months are now better than 50/50. I'm not sure how much better, and I don't think it's much, but this is progress. Maybe 55/45 would be close. I won't stop until it is at 100 percent. You're going to be found out. You will have to answer for your rotten conduct and it's possible that I will have to answer for something like the entirety of my life. If that's the case, I say bring it on. My life is very defensible, and your rotten conduct is extremely not so. You have been so cruel to me, when I didn't do anything to you. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am extremely weakened. For the past 2 months, I have been unable to do anything for the first 2 hours and 40 minutes after I get up. I am extremely tired when I wake up. I thought it was due to this Walgreens brand of generic adderall. When I started getting my meds from Walgreens is about when this started. I had to get name brand adderall this month. It is the same thing. It has nothing to do with my adderall. It is from my heart being weakened. I had terrible indigestion last night. I've had increasingly frequent and increasingly severe problems with indigestion for a while now. Last night was the absolute worst I've ever had. This is also from my heart being weakened. I know this for a fact. I can tell by how I feel. My intuition mirrors how nature works, as I have told you before, and this is another factor. I am very keen on figuring out stuff. I am in the car with my mother right now. She took me to get my face and head shaved. I have a really hard time shaving. Most months I can't do it. We end up going to a barber to get it done. We are in Boone Nc driving home. The ride over here and the ride back have been murder. My mother is not a good driver and the least little bit of stress kills me. It is like literal torture. It may take me a day or 2 days to recover from this. It's not as bad as last time. This is because the ride over here was during daylight. Last time we went to Boone, the ride over here and the ride back were both at nighttime. I have a hypervigilance and I am prone to interpreting everything that happens as a threat. For instance, when a car is coming towards us on the other side and the road is curved, I will start to feel like it's going to run into us. I live in torment and I am tortured daily, while the assholes on the other end deny reality and cruelly let me suffer. I will warn others about the comen and murderers at the United States Department of Justice. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Why are you so cruel to me? If you were in my shoes, would you not call the Justice Department depraved comen and murderers? I have been massacred with crime and I came to you for help. I am permanently damaged and I suffer every single day. I have read 2 or 3 books since June of last year, when I got my adderall back. I used to read up to 2 or 3 a day, when I was well. I'm not sure that there were more than 2 weeks out of the past 20 years that I didn't read at least one book per week. Everything has been stolen from me. Why are you such cowards? Why will you not warn everyone else about the danger involved in asking Wells Fargo to have an honest conversation? This is a good way to have your life destroyed, as my case has so clearly proven. Do people not deserve to know what will happen to them, and how no one will help them. It hurts to speak of you the way that I do. It also hurts to speak of Wells Fargo the way I speak of Wells Fargo. I do not like seeing my fellow man in this light. But you force it. Your despicable behavior leaves me no choice. I typed the below message a few days ago and decided not to send it. I will send it now. This is who you are. The person I describe below is the person that you see when you look in the mirror, the person who participates in the cruel murder of a kindhearted man: You have watched the play by play of a man dying right in front of you. You've saw it one frame at a time, as if it's in super slo mo, and you do nothing to intervene. I have sent you emails saying that I'm going to die since at least June of 2021. Count how many days that is. Day after day, week after week, I tell you that I'm getting weaker, that I can't take no more, that I'm going to die. You don't give a shit who this bank hurts, as long as it's not you. You are not at all interested in preventing any outcome where this bank becomes a murderer. It is closer to the case that you are hell bent on this bank becoming a murderer and on it doing so under your watch. Instead of intervening to stop this, you will rob my corpse of the evidence I have against this bank, if and when I die. I have thought of this outcome for a long time, the outcome where I die and my corpse is robbed. I first suspected that Wells Fargo would rob my corpse when I die. I had a plan to leave my computer on and have it covertly record my corpse being robbed and livestream it on Facebook. I told the LA Times about this in detail. I can't remember how much about this that I have told you. It took me a while to develop such a low opinion of the justice department, that I would also put you in the category of indecent corpse robbers. If I die, you will direct people to destroy all the evidence I have against you. You will tell them to track down all my cloud accounts and links to my evidence, and to destroy it all. It will be futile and the people will tell you this. You will respond by telling them to unlock my digital devices with my cold dead fingers and by waving my phone over my dead face, as the tears I cried in my final hours have yet to dry and are still visibly on my cheeks. You'll be trying like hell to get my passwords, so that you can destroy all of the evidence of your crimes and the crimes of this bank. You claim to be a justice department, but your actual role is to enforce the impunity of this bank. This is not a flattering look at you. None of what I have said flatters you in the least. It is what I see as true. You will cover up this bank's crimes. Then you will aid it in murdering me. Then you will rob my corpse. Then you will defame the dead man whose corpse you just robbed. I hope it goes without saying that I aspired to be more than this in life. I had aspirations about what I wanted to be in moral terms. I tried so hard to do right. I did this so that I could be murdered by people like you, people for whom their conduct is not a concern. I don't know what makes you this way. I believed in you so much in the beginning. I've been up all night. Getting my sleep turned back around so that I go to bed at about now and wake up at 1 to 4 am. This allows me to maximize the alone time that I have. I made some audios and I had to edit out an hour and 20 minutes or so of tangents at the end. I've still got probably 50 to 70 minutes of tangents. I'm going to give you the timestamps when I send them, at least some of them. There is one ~ 30 minute tangent that you can skip in one step. Part of what I'm going over in these audios is this symptom where I feel like a man trapped in a cage in a jungle. This is not a new symptom at all and I've told you about this since roughly jan to feb 2021. You may have missed for a number of reasons. One is that the first mention I give of this is on my audio titled impactOnMyLifeFinal. On that audio, I am on extra adderalls and I have trouble finishing my thoughts. The part where I describe this symptom starts at around 39:20. I start to explain how I will die having never known what it's like to be in love, and then I start to explain how "it's dangerous", talking about living with people. I make brief references to my emotional pain and feeling worthless as I describe this. At one point I say "I'm not a dangerous person" or something like this, and then I start talking about how couples will yell at each other. When I say "im not a dangerous", in the context (which you don't get because I stutter from one thought to the next), what I'm saying is that I'm not a generally dangerous person as long as I can be alone most of the time, and I'm using this to contrast what would happen if I had some girl living with me, in which case it would be dangerous. I skipped around in my speech and didn't fully articulate that second part. That video (which was converted to audio and sent to you) was recorded on 9/16/2020. At that point I had had this symptom for many many months, and it was generally more intense and more persistent than it is now. As of now, it's still a big, big problem, on top of other big problems. I cannot live with anyone except my mother. It doesn't appear to be overly dangerous living with her, although I am very tempted to hedge my bets there. What I need even in this case, to make it totally fine, is I need to be in control of when people are here and when they are not. So we have it that I can't live with anyone except my mother, and if we wish to avoid even the remotest possibilities for things to go awry, I cannot live with even my mother. The next problem is that I cannot live by myself. I do not make enough money and I cannot manage the affairs of life. I am essentially completely unable to clean house and do routine things and maintenance like this. Then we have the fact that I am a ruined human being, and that my suffering is so extreme that to put me in any worse circumstances than I have now would be cruel and unusual punishment. This is forgetting the fact that I've committed no crime. I am just so destroyed and ruined. I have thought of this before, that if this hostility ever got the best of me and I ended up in prison, I would almost certainly be able to make an argument that I should have my notebook computer, an extra large cell, maybe in a private section where I would not be distressed by the presence of the other inmates. The notebook computer would be necessary because I would need something to offset my horrific suffering. This broken brain causes me such torment. It is cruel and unusual punishment just to be alive, much of the time. I'm getting tired and have to go. I have no idea what the hell we are to do about this, all of it. This situation with me and my symptoms and the fact that I'm permanently ruined and disabled. The change in my tone is because I've started to have a sense that there is something different going on on the other end. I do not know for sure, but it seems possible that you have concern over the massive wrong that I have been done and the terrible damage I have suffered and the horrible situation that we are in. I explain this in my audios in more detail. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You do not care. I get my hopes up that you do, but you do not. You're for sure going to get found out. I'm possibly going to die prematurely. Very possible that I die of natural causes. For sure is a slight overstatement. Odds you get found out are 99.9% or greater, just not 100%. There is nothing you can do, short of murdering me, that will stop this, at this point. 99.9% is for the next 12 months. Next 1 to 3 months is a little over 50%. I think 55% is about right. I don't know why you do this to me. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I have been too handicapped to do anything at all for the past 5 to 7 days. The exception is a few hours of audios I made while I was staying up all night. But this is my life. I am extremely handicapped. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I want so bad to learn and to master stuff but I cannot. I'm not even able to read to any significant degree most days. This is the tormented, tortured life that I live. I suffer incredibly and for every sort of good day that I have, I pay the price of having 2 or 3 or 4 or more terrible days. The only thing I can do when I suffer like this and am handicapped like this is listen to/watch Netflix or YouTube videos, or listen to music, or surf Twitter or Facebook. I'm going to die. I don't know when but I'm going to give in one day. If and when I die, I want to die peacefully. If you will help me die peacefully, this situation will be over. I would like to have a comfortable place to live in for my last days. A comfortable place with a lot of wide open space. Cramped up and/or cluttered spaces tax my mind and cause me suffering. I would like to have maybe 14 days in such a place, where I could be alone like I need to be, and to have good food to eat. I could relax and look forward to dying. Then I could be injected with sodium pentobarbital on a nice, big, comfortable bed. It is sad to me, that I will likely have to die. Life hurts me every single day and I dream of a life where there is something in it for me. I will take what I can get however, and dying is preferable to living the life that I live now. It is far, far preferable to the life I will face when my social security backpay runs out. That is my biggest fear. I tell you what I want, and you will not give it to me. There is nothing so little as to not be too much to ask for, to the cold hearted people on the other end. It is even too much to ask for, for me to be allowed to die. I want $10 billion, to make my life worth living. Even then it's quite likely that I will spend most days wanting to die. My broken brain doesn't know how to fix itself, and it leaves me in a persisting state of torment. $10 billion doesn't sound like a little, and I guess it is not, but it is pennies on the dollar compared to what a fair trial would get me. A fair trial is defined as a trial where Wells Fargo isn't given complete impunity to do as it wishes by the United States of America, and where the United States of America would police and prosecute Wells Fargo if Wells Fargo pays off my lawyer and/or the judge and/or all 12 jurors and/or the appellate courts and/or all of the witnesses, as Wells Fargo is prone to paying off all of the above and certainly will, and where the United States of America doesn't sponsor a cover-up that ruins my case by altering the evidence in my favor and fabricating evidence that is not in my favor. I could probably add more to this list, but a fair trial is already out of the question, isn't it? One option you have is to confess to all of the above. Admit to your crimes and police Wells Fargo, as if you are a law enforcement agency. Put some fear in them, to deter them from rigging the game through crime. Then we can let a fair process ensue, and we will see if your conception that they've done nothing wrong is the truth (I'm not sure to what extent you have deceived yourself into believing this bullshit notion that they have done nothing wrong, and to what extent you are consciously and deliberately lying). I tell you off like this and I'm mean as hell at times, but I'm a dying man and my suffering is intolerable. I suffer constantly and it is torment. I'm nicer to you than you would be to me. I'm also nicer to you than you are to me in this matter, and I never did anything to you. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I have a tendency to forget about you and the problem this situation poses for you. You may be ready to scream and you may be extremely stressed out about this. I'd say you've been in both of those conditions at some point of this process and probably for a prolonged period of time. I hope you can understand how it is easy to do this, forgetting about you, when you do what you do. You mercilessly abuse me and go through my communications looking for info that you can use in criminal abuse of me. You do this to a suffering man, who is disabled and craves death. I don't know how you see yourselves, but you come across as monsters, and the way my intuition works, monsters don't have feelings. It is hard to step back and consider the possibility that it is just your behavior that is monstrous, and that you have feelings. There is a lot that is beyond my capacity, due to how weak I am and how much I suffer. I'm going to be mad if, when this all comes out, you keep victimizing me or do things to make my life hard. I can't give any more fair an offer than for me to die. If you won't even consent to that, you are just hopelessly immoral. I prefer death to the suffering that I live in for most of most of my days. I especially prefer death to any life that is harder than what I already have. You should take me into consideration. That's what you have yet to do. Even AU girl was for your own benefit. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You may wonder why I entertained the idea of AU girl, given that I can't live with anyone. For one, it was too tempting. I liked her a lot. For two, I had planned on some arrangement where we have separate houses. I think I had contemplated having a house that is both of ours, a second house that is just mine, and a third house that is just hers. I would have become more intense about addressing this potentially dangerous situation when it came time for her to move. I also worried a lot that she would do something that I tell her not to do. Specifically I worried about her bringing someone over that was not planned. One of my rules was going to be that people cannot come over at unplanned times, and I needed to be informed/consulted way ahead of time. That was one function of the house that is just mine. I could have a place where I and only I ever go. If she brought someone over to our joint house when I was there and it was unplanned, this would have triggered extreme hostility over my wishes not being respected. I would tell the person to leave immediately, and if he hesitated a second or did anything other than immediately turn around and get the fuck out of there, I would have murdered him and I would have murdered her. I would then try to kill myself and I would not be successful. If she had decided to come over here, I would have become very intense about this situation and explain to her how I work. If people listen to me and I am allowed to call the shots, I can keep this situation going forever with no danger for anyone, and I am very motivated to have something in life. I can and will put huge effort into making the situation work. I could have kept it going forever in my apartment in Charlotte. My system was fried by all of this stress. It was particularly fried in July and August of 2021. I lost 30 pounds in 4 weeks, from stress, because my life in Charlotte was tanking and I was helpless to do anything about it. I still do not think you get the gravity of this. Try to imagine stress so intense that you burn up enough calories to lose 7.5 pounds a week. I could feel the intense stress in my entire body, all day long. It felt like a continuous near heart attack that never relented. I felt like I was going to explode and I literally felt my system being fried. My organs probably aged 20 to 50 years in those 4 weeks. Again, picture this. I think when I say this, you think of yourself or someone that you know, who had a lot of stress and lost a lot of weight. For instance, I knew a girl whose husband hanged himself and died, when his wife and kids relied on his income for the house payment and everything else. This was following the girl and her husband fighting. This girl lost a ton of weight in not long. She got very skinny, basically kind of boney. I don't think she lost 7.5 lbs a week, but she lost a lot of weight. Maybe you know of someone similar. With this girl, she wouldn't eat as much. Her stress was the cause of behaviors that caused her to lose weight. She didn't lose weight just from the stress alone. The actual cause was primarily her losing the desire to eat. So this girl and others you may know are not examples of what happened to me. Picture standing still or laying down. Picture having no activity at all, and picture yourself feeling stress. Think of how intense that stress would have to be to actually burn enough calories to lose 30 lbs. I can promise you that you've never experienced anything like this. If you had, you'd be like me. I am a dying man. I will need a pacemaker in not too long. If these people didn't minimize my suffering and impairment on my medical records, I would have gotten approved for disability. I was impaired to an extreme, and I very clearly reported this impairment. My life in Charlotte would not have tanked as I was helpless. I would not have had this stress and my system would not have been fried. So why don't you tell people what happens to you when you ask Wells Fargo to have a conversation? Why don't you make an announcement that any such person will be tortured to death by the justice department? Do you need to catch more flies? Worried that the next person who poses the threat of this horrifying situation, where Wells Fargo pays the price of its own conduct, will not come to you begging for help and begging you for their life, as you mercilessly abuse them? I'm not sure if I would have murdered him and her, but that's what I feared. I would feel horrible about it afterwards. There is something extremely bad wrong with me. Today is going to be another day of suffering, it looks like. I'm trying to get my sleep schedule turned around. The other night didn't work, I slept too long and ended up getting up at 11:10 am. My target is 1 to 4 am. Mom will be home soon and it will cause me terrible distress when she's here. You are so accustomed to getting this barrage of emails. The day is likely to come where you will not receive any more. It may surprise you, although it should not. Some things are permanent and some things there is no taking back. You will regret it terribly, if and when that day comes. I am one of the toughest, if not the toughest human being I've ever known of. I'm still human. I am dying slowly. It does not feel slow, not exactly. I have an ongoing sense that I'm can't make it any longer. One more day feels like too much. If I do not die of natural causes, I will see to it that you are found out. It may seem selfish to you, that I will not sit back and let this bank get away with murder. I don't see it that way, and I have been murdered. Make no mistake about it. My soul has been murdered and my body will not last much longer. I will also write my book and tell my story. I will cry when I write my story, and the world will cry when they read it. One thing I get the sense of, at times, is that you are really clammed up. The reality of what I say is not sinking in. It will sink in one day. You will come to see the exact truth of what I say. There is no good solution to this situation. The best thing is probably for me to die. If you give me $10 billion like I want, I'll probably make it 1 year before I move overseas to die. I'm going to end up on a pacemaker. What I want to do is to learn and master stuff like before. Not being able to do that is torture, and I'm going to get worse and worse ill. I will be almost completely incapacitated in probably another 1 to 2 years. I may be wrong. It may be that if I had money to get medical care, these physical problems that I have would go away. I don't know. What I really need to do, I think, is exercise. Problem there is I have no room to do that in this apt, and I'm not sure if I could if I did have room. My mind gets extremely taxed and it does so very easily. doing just about anything will tax my mind. The only exception, sort of, is working on my computer. I can work on my Computer more than I can do anything else. Other things tax my mind very badly. I think that if I lifted weights, it would cause me terrible distress. I just thought of how I only send you emails when I'm suffering. Generally, if you're not getting emails I'm either incapacitated or more likely having a better day. Today has been a good day, as days go for me. I got up at 3 am and got to work on some of my various projects. I've been kind of in that flow state for a decent part of the day. I don't get in the flow state like I used to, before I was disabled, but I have something that is pretty close. Life is going to be hell for the people at Wells Fargo in the near term future. I'm speaking mostly of the management at the highest level. It will be probably at least 3 weeks and likely more than that. These people did this to me and won't do nothing to help me, so I have to fight back. I'm fighting as hard as I can and I have been for years. I will be in the news almost for 100% sure, within the next year and probably a lot sooner. I will keep fighting them until they help me and even if they do help me I'm going to write my book. If they help me, I will put in the front of my book that Wells Fargo did what they could and that I wish them well and want others to give them a chance. If they don't help me, I will include no such disclaimer, and no one will want to do business with a pack of soul murderers like that did this to me. I don't know why these people are this way. I was the best employee this bank could ask for. I had the right education and credentials, I was talented, and I could and did work harder than anybody (although after my health got worse, that kid Patrick gave me a run for my money and actually probably out worked me many months. I still did more for that dept than anyone ever has. They would have been so helpless and up the creek if I didn't make so much documentation and leave so many notes about how to do the work). What do they do? They take someone without the right education and credentials and put him 2 levels, then 3 levels above me. He puts the whole department through hell and then he ruins my life. After this I plead in humiliation for a simple conversation and this bank murders my soul in response, and leaves me handicapped. The destruction that this bank poured over my life provoked me to fight it like no one else ever has. I'm sure I've made people's lives hell, at least for small periods of time, during this battle, and I've quite probably got a death blow for this bank. For sure, if the Justice Department et al had any interest in prosecuting and shutting this bank down, I've got all you'd ever need. The rightful consequence of what this bank did to me is to shut it down and tank the whole world in the process. In that case, the world would feel destruction not because of my actions but because of the actions of this bank. There is nothing that I can do to make it necessary to shut down this bank. If I commit a crime, I get off the hook or I go to jail, but in either case the bank just goes on. For the bank to fail, the people at the bank have to do something wrong, and they have, very seriously and over and over. But back to me, I can't pull the bank's charter and I can't put them in jail, but people will not want to do business with this bank when they see the awful cruelty of what it has done to me. I have a story to tell my friend. We're all the hero of our own story, but even to others I am the hero in mine. People will see this kindhearted man and they will see how I am as big as a mountain, and they will see that my soul has been murdered. I will cry and they will cry along with me. They will not support a bank that does this to someone. Everything I say is completely accurate and if you don't agree you are missing something. You will see, one day. The day will come when you will see how completely accurate every last thing that I have said is.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

In that last email, I was probably inaccurate in saying that the days you don't get an email I'm doing better. That is true for a lot of the days but is likely not true of some others. I suffer every single day. We are past the point of no return. I'm not sure how long we have been past that point. What I mean is that I will never have a life that I am happy about, no matter what happens. I have been damaged too severely and my sense of self has been crushed. My physical health is also terrible and getting worse. This is just as I predicted. In July and August 2021, I knew that I would have premature health problems. I also felt it extremely likely that I die prematurely from natural causes. We will see if that comes to pass. The lesson that I have learned here, you may be tempted to say is something like "don't fight Wells Fargo", but is actually "don't go near Wells Fargo." You've got people acting recklessly and carelessly in a very fragile world. Their actions are designed to break something, and it's against the rules for them to pay the price for their own conduct. So what gets you broken is everything they come into contact with, except themselves and their own circumstances. I had no choice but to fight them. I had to have a life and I had to have something in life besides nothing, and their crimes left me disabled and permanently injured. I have this powerful and recurring drive to learn and master stuff and get good at stuff and advance my cause and advance my life, and I cannot do it. I am handicapped and that ability is gone. It is so painful. The way this drive will not go away has an effect of renewing my sense of loss every day, usually over and over again. My soul is crushed 1,000x a day, as I grieve for and long to be the person that I used to be.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Yes, psychological or emotional traumatic events can have a significant impact on the brain and contribute to brain changes and damage.

Studies have shown that exposure to traumatic stress can lead to structural and functional changes in the brain, particularly in regions associated with emotions, memories, and stress response. Traumatic stress can also cause changes in neurotransmitter function and increase inflammation, leading to further brain changes over time.

In some cases, psychological or emotional trauma can contribute to the development of mental health conditions, such as post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), depression, or anxiety, which can have a negative impact on brain function and structure.

It's important to note that not all individuals who experience psychological or emotional trauma will necessarily experience brain damage or changes. However, exposure to traumatic stress can increase the risk of mental health conditions and brain changes, and prompt intervention is important to minimize these effects.

Subject: ChatGPT agrees with me and with the dozens of medical professionals I have saw

From: Leonard Clinton Williams III [REDACTED]@gmail.com>

I'm getting sick of this topic of my healthcare records. It is a farce that I have to explain them to you. I am, however, of the opinion that this is a very likely reason as to why you are so merciless and cruel to me. Wells Fargo is also fabricating ridiculous excuses for Wells Fargo's conduct, based on my healthcare records and based on the ignorance of the people at the justice department and elsewhere. You don't seem to realize that you're not doctors, which is quite a strange thing. Here is the question I just asked ChatGPT: "When I was 18 years old, I had a psychosis. I have a family history of bipolar disorder. My psychosis was preceded by many months of excessive use of marijuana and frequent use of hallucinogens. I smoked 9 to 11 marijuana cigarettes a day, and I used lsd or psilocybin mushrooms about once a month. I continued to abuse marijuana in this manner for 3 to 5 months after my psychosis developed. I smoked 9 to 11 marijuana cigarettes a day. This caused my condition to get worse in an extreme way. I was finally hospitalized at a psychiatric hospital, after my condition had worsened during these 3 to 5 months. During my stay at this hospital, I made threats of extreme and disturbing violence. I said extreme and disturbing sounding things related to sex and violence. Was my behavior out of the ordinary, for someone in such a terrible condition, suffering from such a severe psychosis? Does my behavior during the stay at this hospital, including the extreme and disturbing things that I said, say anything about me as a person? Does the fact that I said these things mean that I am a sick, disturbed, or dangerous person?" Here is ChatGPT's answer: It's important to remember that your behavior during that period of your life was a result of your severe psychosis and was not a reflection of your true character. Psychotic symptoms, such as those you experienced, can cause individuals to engage in behavior and speech that is out of character and may be extreme or socially inappropriate. It's also important to note that substance abuse, such as the excessive use of marijuana and hallucinogens, can increase the risk of developing psychotic symptoms and may worsen the severity of existing symptoms. In your case, it's likely that the combination of a family history of bipolar disorder and the effects of substance abuse contributed to the development of your psychosis. It's important to seek treatment for individuals experiencing a psychotic episode, as early intervention and appropriate care can help improve outcomes and reduce the risk of further episodes. In some cases, medications such as antipsychotics can help reduce the severity and frequency of psychotic symptoms, including socially inappropriate behavior or speech. However, the specific treatment approach will depend on the individual and the underlying cause of their psychosis. It's important to remember that your behavior during that time was a result of your severe mental health condition, and not an indication of your true character. With proper treatment and support, it is possible to manage the symptoms of a psychosis and recover.

I don't mean to rub it in your face, but I'm right almost every time. Pretty rare for me to be wrong. In this instance, it is one of the worlds most advanced artificial intelligence technologies that is confirming how dead on that I am. Here is a sample of my Q&A:

Me: Can an acute psychosis result in severe impairment of cortical inhibitionChatGPT: Yes, an acute episode of psychosis can result in severe impairment of cortical inhibition. Psychosis is a mental health condition characterized by changes in a person's thoughts, perceptions, and behaviors, which can include hallucinations, delusions, and disorganized thinking.During an acute episode of psychosis, changes in brain function and chemistry can result in alterations in cortical inhibition, which is the process in the brain that helps to regulate and control behavior, thought, and emotion. When this process is severely impaired, it can result in disinhibited and impulsive behavior, as well as increased risk of acting on delusions or hallucinations.It's important to note that the specific effects of an acute episode of psychosis on cortical inhibition will depend on many factors, including the underlying cause of the psychosis, the presence of comorbid conditions, and the person's individual temperament and life experiences.Regardless, it's important for individuals experiencing an acute episode of psychosis to seek treatment and support from a healthcare professional, who can help them manage their symptoms and reduce the risk of further episodes. This may include medication, therapy, and lifestyle changes, as well as supportive care and monitoring from a mental health professional.Me: Can severely impaired cortical inhibition cause people to say foul or disturbing sounding thingsChatGPT: Yes, severely impaired cortical inhibition can lead to changes in behavior and speech that may be perceived as foul or disturbing. Cortical inhibition helps to regulate and control behavior, thought, and emotion, and when this process is severely impaired, it can result in disinhibition and impulsiveness.For example, someone with severely impaired cortical inhibition may say things that are uncharacteristically aggressive, vulgar, or inappropriate, without considering the consequences of their words. Similarly, they may engage in behaviors that are disturbing or disturbing to others, such as acting out sexually or engaging in acts of violence.It's important to note that the specific behaviors and speech that a person may exhibit will depend on many factors, including their individual temperament, life experiences, and the specific cause of their impaired cortical inhibition. Additionally, some of these behaviors may be a symptom of underlying mental health conditions, such as schizophrenia, bipolar disorder, or epilepsy.Regardless, it's important for individuals with severely impaired cortical inhibition to seek treatment and support from healthcare professionals, who can help them manage their symptoms and reduce the risk of out-of-character behavior. This may include medication, therapy, and lifestyle changes, as well as supportive care and monitoring from a mental health professional.Me: Can a history of severe sexual abuse from a very early age result in self-perceptions that you are sick, twisted, disturbed, or evilChatGPT: Yes, a history of severe sexual abuse, especially from a very early age, can have a profound and lasting impact on a person's self-perception. Sexual abuse can cause a range of psychological and emotional trauma, including feelings of shame, guilt, and self-blame.In some cases, individuals who have experienced sexual abuse may internalize negative messages from their abuser or may feel that they are somehow to blame for the abuse. This can result in self-perceptions of being sick, twisted, disturbed, or evil.These self-perceptions can be reinforced by societal attitudes and beliefs about sexual abuse, which often place blame on the victim and stigmatize those who have experienced abuse. This can lead to feelings of isolation, hopelessness, and low self-esteem, and can have a lasting impact on a person's mental health and well-being.It's important for individuals who have experienced sexual abuse to seek treatment and support from a mental health professional, such as a therapist or counselor. Therapy can help individuals process their experiences and address the psychological and emotional effects of the abuse, including negative self-perceptions. With time and support, individuals can work towards healing and reclaiming a positive self-image.

This is the most inconvenient situation conceivable. I didn't cause it and the Justice Department needs to learn how to be upset with Wells Fargo. Wells Fargo's behavior is ridiculous and the people at Wells Fargo are full of shit. There was never a reason to invade my privacy. There was never a reason to illegally obtain my healthcare records. They didn't see signs that I am dangerous, because there are no signs. They didn't see signs that I might be dangerous, because the fact that I am not is so apparent and so well established as to make it perverse and ridiculous to even suggest that I am. Essentially everything about me adds up to the complete opposite of being a dangerous person. The weight of the evidence, considered from any perspective at any level is absolutely crushing. You cannot honestly consider this bullshit to be remotely plausible. This is aside from the fact that if I was a "dangerous" person, the people at Wells Fargo aren't remotely qualified to determine this or to even see the "signs." I mean come on people.All I asked for was a simple conversation. I ask for this, in terrible pain, for over 1 year. The people at Wells Fargo won't help me. At about the 1.5 year mark, they have me kidnapped. I catch them, and thus begins a years long process of the bank trying in every way that it can to avoid admitting that these people made a mistake. These people dig in their heels harder and harder every round, it seems. Over time, I call bullshit on their whole enterprise and rationale, in ways that are more and more definitive and in your face (not that the very first time didn't cut it. Anyone who can think critically would see what obvious bullshit this nonsense is after reading the letter I sent you in January 2021. I nuke it completely, once more, in the audios I sent you in April 2021. It's so apparent and it's especially telling how I know exactly what they did and that I know quite close to exactly what they said).I'll send you some more chatgpt q&a as I go. If you've ever for one second entertained the idea that I am the one making stuff up, you've got it completely backwards. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Here's another snippet of a response from chatgpt:Yes, severely impaired cortical inhibition can lead to out-of-character behaviors. Cortical inhibition is a process in the brain that helps to regulate and control behavior, thought, and emotion. When this process is severely impaired, it can lead to a release of behavior and thought that is not typical for a person, and may appear to be "out of character." Subject: I had a good day today

It started out as pure hell. That lasted hours. I woke up from an extended nap at ~ 9:13 pm if I remember right. I immediately took my zyprexa, hoping for it to knock me out. I had slept for about 7 to 9 hours for my nap. I didn't mean to sleep that long. I want to get up between 1 am and 5 am. I thought if I could go back to sleep at ~ 9:30 I could get up at 5. It turned out that I wasn't able to fall asleep. I laid in bed and suffered horrifically until 2:30 am. Part of my suffering had to do with me not taking my adderall when I got up, I think. I was trying to go to sleep so I didn't take it. There is some common brain chemistry with my attention and my ptsd, such that adderall medicates my suffering. Strattera medicated my suffering too. That's another indication of this common brain chemistry. I have a strong sense that this is the case, that these have a common brain chemistry.I took my adderall at 2:30 am. I was timing it so that I hopefully fall asleep at 4 or 5 pm. Then I will have my sleep turned around. When I have a lot of alone time I do much better. I started to feel better and got kind of focused. Then my worker in Pakistan delivered the work that I assigned him the other day. That was great news, especially since he appears to have done it almost perfectly. I can't remember if I've ever told you about this most recent project I'm on. It's actually not recent, I just abandoned it for a long time and have now picked it back up. I do think that I probably did tell you. If I didn't, instead of spilling the beans like I always do I'll just keep it a secret.I am increasingly handicapped for increasingly larger portions of the typical day, so I'm utilizing some cheap labor and offshoring some of the work related to my fight. I have a friend in India that I might pick up again, just maybe (actually I've got 2 in India), and I really like this kid from Pakistan.I'm not sure what you think of all of this. And of course, you'll notice how my mood and my tone changes when I'm in a better condition. But I have no idea. I sit here and get mad and send you emails all the time. Then I am constantly suffering and sending you emails. Then there is the fact that my situation is the end of the world. Or maybe it's not. Maybe you just let this bank plow all over me and give it complete impunity because you don't like me (or maybe because you really like them). I mean no one any harm. I just cannot help but to feel my own suffering and to want so desperately to do something about it. I also get very angry at the injustice that has been dealt to me and at how cruelly I have been treated. I want these people to pay. If they won't change their ways and have some humanity and help me, I want them to be publicly known as the remorseless soul murderers that they are. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

There is no shortage of doctorate level psychologists and M.D. psychiatrists who echo exactly the same things that I have told you. I don't go looking for them. It's more a matter of not being able to hide from them. How many doctors are the people at Wells Fargo better than? We've got I don't know how many from the hospital at age 18 and the place in newland that I went to for over 10 years. Then I sent the OIG a letter with a bunch more. Here we have yet another. Then, of course, I send you what the AI program replied to me. That program was given the medical licensing examination and scored 70%. What is the score of the people who work at Wells Fargo? What is the score of the senior manager who couldn't pass a high school level test on accounting, the subject matter of the work of the department he presides over? I view it as highly likely that the criminals at Wells Fargo have hired their own experts, to examine the illegally obtained healthcare records that Wells Fargo dances around with in front of the regulators and authorities. Those experts have most likely agreed with Wells Fargo, if this has in fact happened. You'll notice a trend here, that all the people who agree with Wells Fargo are 1. Facing prison time over their conduct towards me; and/or 2. Facing civil litigation, loss of funding, and being put in the news over their conduct towards me; and/or 3. incompetent, with no business even offering an opinion; and/or 4. Paid by Wells Fargo. Wells Fargo's experts agree because that's what they're paid for. Any expert that doesn't agree will be fired on the spot. The only game* this bank knows how to win is a game that is rigged in its favor. This is because it has not had to play a game that is not rigged in its favor in a very, very long time. You'll notice an opposite trend with the people who agree with me. They- 1. Are not paid to agree with me. 2. Often have a vested interest in not agreeing with me. 3. In many cases do not even know me. They are just sharing their expertise on public forums, and their expertise will often confirm things that I have told you nearly verbatim. *Im using an analogy. This is not a game. This is the cruel and merciless criminal abuse of a kindhearted man, and his asking for something that resembles justice. if the people at Broughton Hospital had any case to make that I was a "dangerous" person, they could have kept me longer, and their funding depends on them keeping as many patients as they can for as long as possible (according to what I've been told). The people and newland deemed me as no longer needing therapy when I was about 29. This is opposed to their financial interests, and they can also potentially be held liable for making the wrong decision about a patient. At the bottom of this email are some screenshots from Twitter. I have extracted the quotes that mirror things that I have told the justice department. " This means, children believe everything that happens to them is because of them." - remember that I told you that, as a child, I believed that my abuse said something about me, not about my caregiver. " This creates a deep internal conflict within Dylan. His father is a god-like figure who his survival depends on. Because of his age and level of emotional development, Dylan cannot objectively view his father." - and I told you that this is because very young children are hardwired to see their caregivers as perfect ("a god-like figure"). These 2 phenomena that I described to you are what she is referring to in this thread. I'm uncertain as to what extent the justice department believes Wells Fargo's bullshit. I'm also uncertain to what extent Wells Fargo believes Wells Fargo's bullshit. I find it hard to believe that anyone could dupe themselves into believing this ridiculous nonsense. It seems more likely that you are both flailing around trying to come up with some remotely plausible or remotely defensible excuse for your behavior, and that you are conscious of the fact that you are being ridiculous and that you are deliberately making things up as you go along. I'll keep beating this horse into the ground. It's just one more episode in this continuous shooting fish in a barrel exercise. I also don't know if Wells Fargo intends for these people that harass me on social media to be dead giveaways. If they do or if they don't, they are dead giveaways. I don't even bother entertaining most of them anymore.

At 7 years old, Dylan has become used to his father's intense temper. He's stressed at work, and often comes home and snaps at his wife and kids. His father has low levels of self regulation, and uses alcohol to soothe his nervous system.

When he's drinking, his temper is worse and he often says extremely hurtful things to Dylan calling him a "wuss" and a "sissy" if he gets upset by his father's actions. At the same time, Dylan watches his father be emotionally abusive to his mother.

I typed this email over the past few days and am not done with it. I'm sending it anyways, as I'm sure the last one has gotten your gears turning with ridiculous bullshit excuses. I may or may not type the rest of it and then send it later. I've been very handicapped for the large majority of today and I was handicapped for a lot of yesterday. I can't believe that you people do this to me. "The people and newland deemed me as no longer needing therapy when I was about 29. This is opposed to their financial interests, and they can also potentially be held liable for making the wrong decision about a patient." - don't get your gears spinning about this. It had to do with my GAF score. I could have argued with them and had my GAF score upped much earlier. I was also under no obligation to see a psychologist, not that I'm aware of. It was a good thing in my life and I got a lot out of it. The time just came when I wasn't interested and also kind of busy. I'd have to fact check the thing about the GAF score, but I'm pretty sure that was what they told me. The GAF score was mostly for their purposes. If you have a lower score, it indicates that you need treatment, and this helps them treat you on a sliding scale. I don't know exactly how it works, but if you have a too high GAF score, they are not allowed to treat you on the sliding scale. That's the gist that I got. I have a tendency to be focused on my own situation and to not take into consideration how hard this likely is on the people on the other side. I thought more about you in the beginning. I wanted to help you. And this is why I do this. I came to you with a demeanor of wanting to help you in any way that I could. I wanted to help you make something good out of this situation, or at least not have it be something too bad. You respond to my kindhearted demeanor by giving dead zero thought to me and by pounding me with merciless criminal abuse. I'm not inclined to think about you any more, and in the condition that I'm in, I have trouble reminding myself that maybe I should. My life has been destroyed. There is no good outcome for me. If you give me the $10 billion that I've offered to settle this for, I'll be off your plate but I will not be happy. I will still spend the majority of my time either wanting to die or mourning the loss of this person that I used to be. I will also ache so hard to have my privacy back. I will never get it back. I'm going to die because this bank won't admit that it made a mistake. I'm paying the price with my life. How would you like it if it costed you your life, that I refuse to admit that I made a mistake? There is a huge double standard here, and I'd be curious about how much you think god loves you relative to how much he or she loves me. Is your life worth 20x mine? 50x mine? Why is it that you allow others to suffer terrible things that you would not be willing to suffer yourself? Back to the discussion from the first few paragraphs, this is yet another thing that you have to contend with. This story you're spinning isn't going to be bought by anyone. A bank that is in the news 15 times a month for ripping people off (and even retaliating against rape victims) has no business being in the banking business, and is much less an expert in psychology, psychiatry, any other branch of medicine, criminology, criminal profiling, etc. They had no business digging into my life and no one will buy this bullshit. If the people at newland "saw signs that I was dangerous" they would have had me sent to a hospital to stay at against my will. Same for the people at broughton hospital. Same for the people at atrium health. They thought I was just fine and dandy 150 felonies ago. Now I'm sure they are telling you that I'm the devil himself, and it just took them too long to catch it. That's what people facing prison time will do. So this is what you have to contend with. Doctor after doctor after doctor who (correctly) thought I was perfectly fine, and quite often an exceptionally ethical and responsible person. Wells Fargo makes up this bullshit that I am a "psychopath" and they probably make up more bullshit that they saw subtle signs of this, and this prompted them to do an expert intervention. For that, they will have to contend with the fact that, when I was ill at 18 and in the hospital, one of my symptoms was a false belief that I was such a person. I told numerous people at the hospital this, including doctors. So here I am, a snake in the grass, except I'm not. I proactively suggest this to these doctors and in the face of this they didn't see any sign. They (correctly) disagreed with me and told me that this wasn't true. Then when I was seeing John in newland, I had a mental health hypochondria based idea that I was a psychopath. I had went as far as to self-score myself on a diagnostic checklist and bringing into our session my score sheet, which showed I was a quite severe psychopath. I think I scored myself a 35 out of 40. John did an informal assessment, as I was reading him my scores for each item. The purpose of this was to show me how silly I was being. At the end he compared his score to mine and explained the difference. I think he had a 16 or an 18. If I were to take a full evaluation today (not just a 3 minute checklist), I would probably score between 14 and 18. But John told me that I was diagnosing myself with cancer and that I had "first year psyche student syndrome." Of course he was right. At the time, John had already had a few decades or more of experience. This was following his 12 years of schooling and training to get his phd. When I went in his office, there was a big bookshelf filled with books, most of which the people at Wells Fargo wouldn't have a prayer of understanding. He had attended all kinds of seminars, including one held by Reid Meloy. He had worked in all kinds of settings, including working with children who had been taken by the DSS or who were in the criminal Justice System. He had done work on real psychopaths at every stage of life, I would say is a safe assumption. He told me about the kinds of things the children he treated and their parents would do. Told me about having adult clients who "beat the steering wheel in the morning when the car won't start...and beat their wife when they get home in the evening, and not feel any different about either of the two." You have me proactively trying to sell experts on the case that Wells Fargo has tried to make to you (and doing it better than Wells Fargo can) and still yet, the experts know the whole idea is baloney. But Wells Fargo wants to sell people on the idea that a bunch of level 1 and level 2 credit analysts, along with their senior manager (who couldn't do the level 1 credit analysts' job) saw the "signs" that these experts had missed for 20 years, even when I tried to convince the experts myself. Even if they are given all of this, even if you grant them this otherworldly expertise, even if you alter what is blatantly not the case and grant them that I am a "psychopath", this changes nothing. They still have all their work ahead of them in trying to say that I'm a "dangerous" person. Psychopaths aren't dangerous people by default. Many of them go to college and go on to be bank CEOs or lawyers for Wall Street. Here is the story. These are the facts-1. Wells Fargo invaded my privacy, committing a vulgar and unlawful intrusion in doing this.2. For no good reason, Wells Fargo had me kidnapped and sent to a hospital, to be falsely imprisoned (and actually kidnapped again, quite possibly, under the law).3. In the preceding scam, Wells Fargo paid a crisis counselor and her coworker to lie about my mental health condition, and to make a blatantly fabricated set of healthcare records.4. The brazenness of these crimes seems to suggest that Wells Fargo had a certain knowledge, from the beginning, that Wells Fargo is above the law and is permitted to do anything that it wishes. Wells Fargo would seem to believe, with 100% certainty, that the people running this scam would never be punished (more on this later). 5. Having been kidnapped at least once on April 21st, 2019, I find myself at atrium Health's inpatient unit. My fragile life, that I so fiercely protected for so many years, was now in the "care" of the people at atrium health. Wells Fargo had already involved one or more employees in this scam.6. I am forced to give atrium health phone numbers that I don't want them to have on their records. I am not allowed to have these numbers deleted or deauthorized when I ask. I am instead laughed at, which is perhaps somewhat of an irony, because...7. Within probably 30 minutes or an hour of handing over this extremely sensitive information to Atrium health (under false pretenses at that), my rights and my privacy are compromised. Atrium health may have broken some kind of world record for how quickly someone's rights can be violated after they turn over private information. 8. At the point of the above, my life has already been ruined, I just didn't know it yet. The person who hands over my mother information lies to me and says that the hospital didn't even call my mother. This was almost certainly done at the request of my mother, who, in her ongoing quest to invade my privacy, talks to people in my personal life behind my back and doesn't want me to know it. She's asked that I not be told and they go along with her. This is how seriously these thugs take the rights of their patients. This is how much dignity I am afforded. They recklessly ruin my life, not seeming to be the least bit inhibited or hesitant in violating my rights, and then they lie to me to my face about it. Both my mother and Wells Fargo are intent on invading my privacy, and they couldn't ask for (and never have had) a better aid in this endeavor than atrium health. I would be far safer writing a book that contained every private detail about my life and turning it over to the public library in Charlotte. Wells Fargo never would have thought to check a public library for information about me, but they did know that I go to atrium health and that atrium health has my private information. Atrium and the public library in Charlotte are equally secure places to store your private information. It is every bit as easy for someone to get your information from one source as it is the other, except the the public library won't proactively deliver information to you, if they know that you want it. That's a value added service that only atrium offers to information seeking intruders. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980): [REDACTED]

He did not. He treated the full gamut of patients. The short list is the list of the kinds of patients he didn't treat. You won't find many on that list. John would also make a much better manager of a credit department than the man that Wells Fargo chose. John's about as sharp as they come. He has no accounting degree, but neither does the guy at Wells Fargo. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm sorry for all of the disparaging things that I have said about the justice department. What you have done to me is extremely wrong and immoral. I am a very badly damaged person. My life will consist of terrible suffering for a large portion of the rest of my life. I am suffering very badly right now. I very often want to die, to escape my ongoing suffering and feeling of being a demolished human being. I have more to say about this and will send you more later. I knew from the beginning that something with the economy might get in the way with me getting justice. What I expected was that the Justice Department would work out something and do the best it could. I didn't understand how this banks conduct and the economy are connected, and I thought that it might be possible to prosecute the individuals involved. If not all of them, I thought maybe you could prosecute some of the smaller players and compel the bank to give me some money. I had all kinds of thoughts about what you might be able to do and what you might do. In the early times in my fight, like January 2020 to maybe May 2020, I consistently thought in terms that were sort of grand. I thought that the Justice Department would be extremely mad at Wells Fargo for committing crimes under the justice department's nose, and I thought that the justice department would be appalled by this sickening and despicable abuse of a kindhearted man. I thought it possible that the justice department organizes a raid on the CIC building in Charlotte. People would go to jail. I would attract the interest of civil attorneys or I would file a lawsuit on my own. I would go into court screaming and crying like I did at my bankruptcy case, and me and/or my civil attorneys would get a huge judgment. As a proxy, without doing any itemized calculations, I used a figure of $85 billion dollars. I would get this judgment and then go overseas to be put to death. Then starting sometime around June 2020, I started hedging my bets. I thought of how it's human nature to be overly optimistic and that things never turn out as nice and tidy as we want. I went back and forth, from possibilities of Wells Fargo getting raided, to the authorities doing absolutely nothing, to the authorities coming to prosecute me and at the same time my healthcare records being published on the internet. Part of this thought process came from me thinking about people I'd saw on different documentaries, who had terrible things happen to them and were then treated like garbage by the authorities. These people all suffered terrible injustices. I considered the possibility that I am dealt another routine injustice of the type that these people had experienced. Overall, still, I thought that something good would probably happen. I thought that the justice department would have an attitude of "we can't have this" in reference to these terrible crimes against me. I pictured this attitude as leading to some kind of outcome for me, even if there were constraints on what the justice department could do because of the economy. I will write more later. I'll just state for now that I never, ever thought of a cover-up happening. If someone had the ability to monitor my never thoughts and did a tally, I probably thought of at least 1,000 different outcomes for what might happen. This is in part because I never stop thinking. Not a single one of these 1,000+ outcomes involved a coverup by the Justice Department. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams

You have no idea how bad that I hurt. At times I feel a little bit bad for hurting. It's like I should be stronger, in the eyes of others, and I at times get a little bit conscious of this. Most of the time, however, I have mercy on myself and remember how strong I used to be. I can't think of anyone else who could have fought a Wall Street bank, who hits them with everything that it's got and is completely unconstrained by the law. Who else could do this, while being disabled and with $0 income? And that was just the beginning. Anyone else would have given up a long time ago or would be dead by now. A ratio of 200 million to 1 is quite a ratio. I have no idea what you aim to do about this, but if you help me, I will try to make this situation better for all of us. I think that your goal is for this to be over, and for us to have some kind of conclusion, and following that conclusion there are no further consequences of this situation for anyone. You want it to disappear. That's what I mean when I say that I'll try to make it better. "Better", in the terms that you see it, = nonexistent. That's what you want. You want this situation to not exist. I say that I will try, because it will take effort. You do not understand this situation and how it has damaged me so extremely, and you likely never will. It is an unfortunate reality that this situation will never be over for me. Right now I am suffering so badly, that if I knew that a check for billions of dollars had been sent to me by fedex, I would still intensely want to die. There is nothing that can be done that will take away my intense suffering and my intensely wanting to die. Both of these come and go, but they never go away for too long, and it is obvious to me that I am permanently damaged, and very severely at that. It would be a massive inconvenience, a massive frustration, and a massive pain in the ass for you, for this situation to go on in perpetuity. If you do take the route where you help me, it would very much suit your purposes to have some kind of happy ending. I will not lie to people and make a claim that my suffering is magically over, but I will say that people make mistakes and that you've done everything that you can do. Following this, I will use my willpower to live through the pain that I experience. That's what I will try to do. I don't want to create permanent or recurring headlines about what a destroyed and suffering person I am. Part of the reason that I'm writing this email is that I've been thinking, and I'm a little bit bummed out about the idea that I get help and that this situation becomes publicly known. Me being publicly known will be another source of torment for me, and the reality of the situation is that there is ultimately nothing that can be done to make my life bearable. It seems like a waste. I feel that I would be better off dying. Then I think of you, and how this would probably be a terrible outcome for you, after you've endured the endless stress of babysitting this situation, which is apparently the potential end of the world. Sitting on the end of the world for years at a time gets to be exhausting, I would imagine. But if I get some help from this, I will have some money to do the things I like and to help people. There will be a lot of good times in-between the suffering, and it will be a life where I have happiness more often. Part of the reason that this is a better outcome for you is that if I start to get the idea that I won't make it, I will make sure to write my book. My book will tell the story of my life and of what these people have done to a kindhearted man like me. The only way that I can write a book about the above topics and not have the whole world reduced to tears is to deliberately lie from the first page to the last. I may write my book anyways, but the difference is that I will be here to defend this bank and to say that it did what it could. This will be good for the bank, because people will listen to me and no one will care about this bank, after they read what it's done to me. What they have done to me will be the end of this bank. I cannot say for certain, but that is what I see as most likely to happen. If it does happen, then that's fair in the end. What this bank has done to me is supposed to be the end of it. Accordingly to the rules that's what is supposed to happen. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I did not choose to be the way that I am or to be in this condition. I think what is most likely the case (almost certainly, in fact) is that the other side is lost as to how I could have been so severely damaged by what has occurred. There are a number of things that contribute to this, I think. One is that the perpetrators never take the situation as seriously as the victim. Perpetrators trivialize the event(s), as a rule. The people at Wells Fargo just dole out money to people to run scams, and they live in real nice houses and sleep in real nice beds, as they do this. In the meantime, I'm in horrible pain and eventually extremely disabled. Another is that you have not lived my life. If my getting help depends on a bunch of Wall Street people understanding what it's like to be stigmatized, that's a tough order to fill. I don't see it happening anytime soon. Wall Street people are on the extreme opposite end of the spectrum. If you put stigmatization on the left side, I'm at the extreme of the left side of the spectrum, and Wall Street people are on at the extreme of the right side. When you are stigmatized, you are designated a person who does not deserve respect, and there is no effort you can make that is extreme enough to overcome this. This is like how I kill myself my whole life to be the best person I can be, how I help people, and how I read 1,000 nonfiction books about how to be a good person. This means nothing. The instant the people at Wells Fargo find out that I've been to a mental hospital, I am treated like less than dirt. This is just like I was treated in the mountains, for the same reason. The people who run Wall Street are the exact opposites. There is no amount of rotten conduct that will take away their halo, where they are deferred to, treated with respect, and treated as honest people. These people have lied, stolen, cheated, and damn near crashed the whole world. Yet you don't see them getting subtly disrespected and disregarded. There are people who criticize them harshly, but these people criticize them as if they are full fledged human beings. The people that run Wall Street are taken seriously in all contexts. It's just like that there are people who would be pseudo kind to me, after they find out about my health condition, but they do so from a place of my wishes not mattering and of them not considering me an equal. After I became stigmatized at Wells Fargo, it was this familiar thing, where my presence in a room carries no force. It hurts so bad to type this, because it makes me think of it. And going forward this is all I will ever know. I got a reprieve when I moved to Charlotte, and then Wells Fargo destroyed the happy life that I had. What they did subsequently has nuked the possibly for any new life that I may have. I hate Wells Fargo and I hate Jenny for doing this to me. I started typing this email days ago. I can't remember every purpose that I had. The main one was that you don't get what has happened to me and you likely never will. If you give me $200 billion and complete impunity to mercilessly abuse you, I could help you understand. I get the idea that you don't understand, and I can sort of get a sense of what this looks like when saw through your eyes. Still yet, that you don't get this is a little off to me. But again, let me disable you. Then give me $200 billion + complete impunity to mercilessly abuse you and to invade every millimeter of your existence with brutal force. To accurately reenact what has happened to me, we would need to change the way that I presume your healthcare providers work. If they have anything more than absolute dead zero inhibition in handing over every private detail of your life to anyone and everyone who wants it, we'll need to change that. Ditto for having any inhibition whatsoever against committing crimes against you. But under these circumstances, at the end of this exercise, you would fully understand. I can't type any more. This hurts too bad right now. The best thing is for me to die. I will be sad to have to die, in a way, but it is what is best. The alternative is for massive resources being directed my way, to try to make my life remotely bearable, and this not being sufficient. There is no magic wand that can make me better and there is just the same no amount of money or of anything else that possesses the quality of magic and will make me better. The damage I have been dealt and what I have lost are too much. That's just how life works. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams

This is what happens when in July and August 2021, I send you emails begging for help repeatedly every day because I'm under such stress that my body is being fried, and you just continue your thug superpower, indecent, shameless whore to Wall Street criminal attack on me when I'm disabled. <https://jamanetwork.com/journals/jama/fullarticle/208031> I saw it coming, at that time, that I would have premature health problems. I lost 30 pounds from stress alone, in the space of 4 weeks. I could feel my system being fried. I felt extremely tense and like I was about to explode all day long, every day, during this time. If you thugs wouldn't have had my healthcare records falsified, DDS would have approved me. I would have had money and not be in a continuous state of my heart being about to explode, over the threat of losing my apartment. My health problems are getting worse. I am weaker and weaker for a greater and greater portion of every day. There is no point in me living. I am being reduced to a vegetable that can't do anything but suffer. I call you names but I need someone to help me. I am a vegetable for the first 2 hours and 40 minutes of every day. That started about 2 or 3 months ago. As of the past few days, the 2 hours and 40 minutes has been extended. Yesterday it was the entire day. I am getting weaker and weaker. My big worry is that I will not be able to write my book if I have to die. As my fight goes on, I like being able to get stuff done sometimes. Everything I say is exactly the case. I accidentally hit send. The idea that anything other than this criminal abuse caused my PTSD is absurd. Any expert you have who is giving you that opinion is doing so for some odd reason, the primary suspects being that he/she is getting paid to do so, or the process has been designed to get the outcome that you want. You have botched this whole thing. None of what you hoped to gain by running this coverup is likely going to be accomplished by the time that all is said and done. In the most extreme case, just maybe you score a few points. The odds are overwhelming that you get found out. If I weren't so ill, almost certainly you would have already been found out. It's an uphill battle for me, because of the credibility problem created by prejudice against me for my health condition, but I'm pretty good at this and I learn something on every iteration. I move at a snails pace, but over time I get stuff done. I created a web portal that had everything you would need, just about. All of this nonsense about my hospital stay at 18, I had 6 or 7 videos that explained it in depth. I told a very complete story in these videos and I included videos to further explain things. Any questions you had, I could have rounded up an answer in not too much time at all. You wouldn't get found out if I would just drop this issue, but I'm sorry, I can't do that. I will not accept this fate, where I am murdered because I asked Wells Fargo to have a conversation, and Wells Fargo gets away with it Scott free. Ditto for allowing myself to be defamed after I am dead. Telling the full story of my life to the public is likely to be necessary, to address the situation that has been created. Telling the full story of my life to the public is the end of me. It is a horrifying thought, the pain that I will live in as a result. The end of me it may be, my life is extremely defensible. I am not sure that many people have lived a more defensible life. I am disabled; I am extremely ill, and I will have to put up a fight, but I will win in the end. The effort that I have put into doing what is right, over so many decades, has rigged that game in my favor. It will be a nightmare and I don't look forward to it, but it's better than the alternative. So you get nothing, and I will have suffered and lost everything for no reason. You have no defensible reason but even your indefensible reasons will fail to pan out. I was the answer to every problem that this bank had. They just didn't see it. Part of the reason they didn't see it is because they didn't bother looking; they don't care. There is nothing in the work that is done in this bank, at any location, that is a total mystery to me. I know about finance. I know about accounting. I know about sales. I know about marketing. I know about technology. For their ethical problems, there is likely no human being on the face of the earth who has thought longer or harder about what it means to do right than me. No one has engaged in this exercise from the position that I did either. My desire to do right in life required me to overcome everything. It even required me to overcome the blood that runs in my veins. I will continue later. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Ditto for allowing myself to be defamed after I am dead." - the above is secondary to the fact that my nonstop suffering keeps me moving. I have a constant desire to escape this suffering or do something to make it better. I am also doomed if you don't help me. My teeth will fall out in not long. My physical health is getting worse and worse, and I can't afford to do anything about it. The neurological impairment caused by my ptsd and related brain damage makes me too handicapped to take care of a home or to take care of myself. My disability money isn't enough to pay for me to live on my own. My mother is getting older all of the time, and she won't be able to work like she does forever. It would be an easy fix for this situation, for your purposes, if I would just forget about this issue. That's not going to happen, and I think you're taking the wrong approach. Would it not be an optimal solution, for the people at this bank to conduct themselves ethically? Would that have not solved this problem and would it not solve all problems like it? Would this not solve a whole lot? Why do we not push for this? It is very hard for the justice department, to oppose Wells Fargo. The situation with Wells Fargo is a very tough situation. There is no easy way to handle it. If we are to fix this problem, we have to approach it courageously. The most likely outcome for me, in any and all cases, is that I die a premature death. And by premature I mean very early. I could die of natural causes at any time. I also suffer horrifically and my suffering has recently become worse. It is more persistent and in a way more tormenting. It has to do with my physical health going down the tubes. There is a connection there. After this thing started, where I am way too weak to do anything for the first 2 hours and 40 minutes of every day, I would suffer very badly for those 2 hours and 40 minutes. It is pure murder. And now this period of weakness is being prolonged. Some days it is literally the entire day. My system being fried from the stress of my battle is what has done this. You don't go downhill at a rate this rapid for any other reason. I saw this coming. I felt it happening in real time. I had horrible stress that never relented, once I became disabled and unable to pay my bills. It was hell on earth x 50. Stress like this that drags on for a year or longer, day after day after day, never relenting, is not healthy. And then in June and August 2021, I probably aged more during those months than I had in the 25 years prior. My face might not have aged, but my body did. I literally felt myself being fried. It was this horrible tension where all day I felt like I was going to explode and that my heart was going to explode, and it never let up. Day after day after day of this tension. One thing that helped me on one day was taking extra adderall. That may not sound right to you, but it did. It medicated my stress and I felt a good bit better. There is likely some doctor that wouldn't agree with me on this, and I don't care. I'm right and anyone who debates with me is wrong. For one, stress that is so intense that it burns enough calories to lose over 1 lb a day for weeks, this is an anomaly. This has not been studied. There is no one who has treated 100s or 1,000s of cases, who can say what is best. Then the bigger factor is that I felt this happening to me. I could feel my body being fried by this intensity. After I took an extra adderall, the intensity abated. I wasn't being fried as badly. We have reached the point where the commonsense best thing to do is for me to die. I still want as much money as I can get. My life will have been lived for the sake of nothing. I will have killed myself for the sake of nothing. I wanted to help people. If I have some money, I can give a lot of it away. I always wanted to help children's homes. I have also thought in the past of helping veterans. If I don't, who will? Then I can live a more comfortably in my last days. I can have pleasant circumstances. People will be happy that I helped them, and I can die a peaceful death. I will always hate Wells Fargo, I think. Even if I wish them well, and even if I mean it (I won't say it if I don't mean it), part of me will always despise these people for what they've done to me. How have we reached this place, where the best choice we have is to put a kindhearted man to death? What is it exactly that I am dying for? Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

The insight that I'm having is that it is my physical health problems that is increasing my torment. I have a strong desire to do things, to get stuff done, to learn, to master, to move forward with my fight. This desire is a product of my mind, and except the very last item, it has existed for my whole life. My body has become not very accommodating to my mind and my drive. I was so impaired before, but during the good times I could do something. It is getting to the point that it takes more and more willpower to do anything, and it is because I am weak. Wells Fargo is just digging itself in a bigger and bigger hole with its conduct. That's most likely the case. It is possible that I die without writing my book or doing much else to expose Wells Fargo. In that case, Wells Fargo and the Justice Department will be able to arrange for my corpse to be robbed and to tell lies about me after I'm dead. Things will work out better for you. This crap they're doing right now doesn't advance their case in any scenario, however. At best they will end up the same. I say that I might die because life is being extremely cruel to me as of recent. It has been extremely cruel for a long time, but I cannot take much more. Things are more soul crushing. There is next to no way that I'm going to make it. I hope that I'm wrong. I took an extra adderall earlier. I did this to help me get something done and also to turn my sleep around at a faster rate. I have to turn my sleep around every month, at some point. It usually takes days, but with an extra adderall I can do it in one night. I used to get very energized when I took an extra adderall. This is the first time that I've taken one and been a vegetable after the fact. I am incredibly weak. I had 3 books that I wanted to write. The number 1 priority is the book that tells the story of my life. I plan to call it The Story of my Life Lived on The Pointed End of Reality. On my title page, the words "The Story of my Life Lived on", I planned on making those very small relative to the rest of the title. This is to have the effect of the book appearing to be titled "The Pointed End of Reality" The pointed end of reality is my original idea. It is a concept that I came up with, and it is a product of my life. It is my concept, but it is a reality lived by countless millions. If I don't get any more energy, I may write it on the notes app on my iPhone. It takes effort to sit at my computer and write, but I am quite able to lay on my bed and type on my phone for most of the day, at least for now. I will cry as I write my book, and then the world will cry with me, as they read it. My continuous striving, my endless thinking, and my constant reflections on life and on what it means to be a human being- these will leave behind something that others can learn from. You will have watched the frame by frame, play by play, slow and tortured murder of a human being. The people at Wells Fargo will have watched the same, the whole time thinking only of their own skin and of their need to see themselves as deities. After I am gone, and the lessons that life has taught me are resonating with the hearts and minds of people far and wide, the people at Wells Fargo who run these scams will still be thinking only of their own skin and of their need to see themselves as deities. In my efforts and my strivings, I have found myself in the distant but very real company, of people who represent everything that it is worth striving not to be. It's possible that I'm getting way ahead of myself here. I am getting extremely weak. Maybe if I exercise I can get some of my life force back. Most likely, to be honest, I think that I would have a heart attack. My health is very very poor. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Why don't you massacre the people at Wells Fargo with crime? Why don't you take away their medication, so that they're too crippled to keep committing crimes against innocent American citizens? You seem to not have a desire to stop the people at Wells Fargo from committing crimes. Instead, it seems you are simply concerned with them not having to face the consequences of the crimes that they commit. Wells Fargo committing crimes is ok. Wells Fargo facing consequences is against the rules. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm feeling a little bit better today. I've got more energy and I'm a little bit pumped up. Still suffering and feeling my impairment. I hate this situation that we are in. I didn't do this.

I think that it is possible that you are making plans to murder me. There is no point in this. My fight might be over. Things are getting worse and making life not worth it any more. I need to find out what hope exists for my physical health. I need to know what the prospects are for making my heart strong again. I don't think they are good, but maybe there is some surgery I can get. I say I don't think they're good, because my brain injury almost certainly prevents me from exercising. Everything I do takes extreme mental effort due to my brain being weakened, and I really doubt that I could lift weights. I may try walking up and down this steep road to our apartment, but the problem there is that might trigger a heart attack. I need some kind of exercise to help with my heart. If all that I will be able to do, through surgery and whatever exercise I am somehow able to do, is keep my health from further declining, then it's not worth it. I need to improve and get back to where I used to be. You will be murderers in the end. There is no need to get in a big hurry. In our list of probable outcomes, the first most probable continues to be that you get found out. That is an almost complete certainty. And now, I'm adding a new extremely probable outcome, that being that this bank and you become a murderer and become publicly known for being a murderer. The first of these probable outcomes I put at 99%. The second, as of now, might be at about 85%, to potentially go up dramatically over a short period of time. Do the math, and it's looking like you are going to be known as a bunch of indecent thug murderers, who have contempt for the powerless, the poor, and the mentally ill, and who run the most indecent, despicable, vomit inducing scam conceivable and then steal poor people's money to pay for it. That's what you've got to look forward to. On my asap todo list is to take a few simple steps to ensure that you are found out, even in the event that you murder me within the next two weeks. I've got ways to do this that you will never anticipate and that you will not be able to deflect. You won't even know it until it has already hit you. You'll still be able to defame me after I'm dead, but I have made enough materials thus far that your defaming me is likely to get discredited and be a transparent load of shit to the public. I guess I'll add to my list of things to do, the task of making some more stuff to defend me. If my life is prolonged, I'll write my book and there will be no question of just how defensible my life is and of how hard I have tried. Your ears will be shattered by the voices of people telling you that everything is exactly as I say it is. You will be surrounded by this; these people will be telling you this, some of them shouting it, from every angle. I feel like it is less probable that you have short term plans to murder me than not, but I will not let every coward in the world lie about me after I'm dead. If you think you have a single point in your favor, you are very badly and sadly mistaken. I picture it as being probable that you think you've got a lot of points in your favor. One thing that can cause this is you losing your mind completely. This whole situation is such a shit show, is so unnecessary, should have never happened, and involves all kinds of ridiculous crimes, foolish mistakes, and despicable conduct on the part of Wells Fargo and the Justice Department. This is very hard to deal with for you, I would imagine. The reality of what has happened is so threatening to your sense of self, to the way that you wish to see yourself, and to the way that you want others to see you, that it can become impossible to cope with. When reality becomes too much to cope with, what people do is we start to abandon reality and reach for things that are not there. So that's one thing, you wish to defend yourself, and the best (and probably only) way to do that is to take shots at me or make me out to be the bad guy. I don't have a complete list of things that you might think or say here, but without me there to hear your criticisms in real time and to give you corrective feedback, this whole process can run wild and have you leaving the planet. The most likely of all the shots you could take at me, I think, is some claim that I'm a "psychopath." I can picture it being possible that you have corralled a bunch of "experts", perhaps together with one of the people from the mountains who hates me with a passion, and you have compared notes, viewed my illegally obtained healthcare records, listened to my audios, analyzed my behavior thoroughly, and drawn some very confident conclusions. I can picture a chorus of people confirming that this is exactly the case. I'm a clear cut psychopath. If the claim isn't that I'm a psychopath, then replace that word with whatever you have described me as. If this has occurred, this is a fruitcake process that you've engaged in. Anyone who says that I'm a psychopath is a fruitcake. If I were allowed to participate in this process, I could have stopped you cold before you even got started. I could have done so definitively and in a way that none of your experts would contend with. Even if they wanted to, the force of my reasoning and the blatant evidence I have against whatever they try to say would force them to give up. I am so extremely far from a psychopath. Psychopaths are cold blooded and I am kindhearted. Psychopaths lie and I am compulsively and brutally honest. I'd have to hear what you claim but you're just toast in any debate you have with me about this. Another thing I think is possible is that in all of these audios I send you, I have said all sorts of things and I often also have an arrogant attitude, speak in a domineering way I'm going to have to continue this later. I'm getting tired. My decision to work for this bank has cost me all my hopes and my dreams and all the happiness that I would have had in life, and it is going to cost me my life. My life was fragile and I needed to work for a business that exercised care and played by the rules. If I know the rules, I can protect my fragile life as long as people follow the rules. This is exactly what I did for so long, until they invaded my privacy. Then, I merely ask to have a conversation, at no cost to anyone, after wailing in tears over what these people had done to me. For this, I am murdered. I am hit with an instantaneous, brutal massacre that causes me to live in horrific pain for years and destroys the life I worked so hard to build. Things have gotten so bad for me as of now, that there is little point in trying to settle with you. If I did, what I want at this point is to get 10 billion dollars, so that I can move to Switzerland and write a book about my life and about what a bunch of pieces of shit you are. I'll give my money away. A lot of it would go to my new friend that I met online. I do not want to live at all. I want to help my new friend and her family, and I want to write 1 book, then if I've still got energy, another, then maybe 1 more after that. After that, my work is done, and I will say goodbye to this world and good riddance to the rotten thugs at United States of America. I might die any day. These problems with my heart are very bad. I can tell by the way that I feel that I am in very bad physical condition. I am so weak. I've been crying on and off for hours, over how bad things have gotten and how most likely I am beyond the point where I can be repaired. My body and my heart muscle were fried by the stress that I was under, as I beg the DOJ for help, and as the DOJ responds by mercilessly abusing me and having my healthcare records falsified, so that I can't even get disability benefits. Disability benefits would have saved my life. On Wed, Mar 8, 2023 at 10:08 AM Leonard Clinton Williams III <[REDACTED]@gmail.com> wrote: Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You thugs are law enforcement. Leave concerns about my mental health to the doctors that handle my healthcare. I don't care about your concerns about my mental health. You should also not care about your concerns about my mental health. This is because your concerns about my mental health are a waste of time, which is in turn because your concerns about my mental health are not real concerns, because you have no clue what you're talking about and are not qualified to understand the subject matter. If you had met me in real life, before looking at my illegally obtained healthcare records, you would have been competent to judge me. In that context, you're as good as anyone else. I would seem to you like a very kindhearted man who likes to help people, and is also odd in many ways. I would seem this way to you because that's exactly how I am. Judging me at a time when I am having very severe symptoms is a different story. Judging or assessing me based on my healthcare records is also a different story. I have no idea what's going on at the Justice Department, or it is more accurate to say that I have a handful of competing ideas that I go back and forth from, and the truth likely matches one of these ideas very closely, or maybe is made up of elements of more than one of them. One thing I think is possible is that you think that this situation we are in is highly complex and confusing. You may have a position of you don't know what to think, and that this whole thing is full of mysteries, some of which may never be solved. If you think this, it is because you've been distracted by all of this psychiatry stuff. That will confuse the hell out of you. It will confuse the hell out of anyone who hasn't been through the grinder of putting in long hours of study over a period of years, then having a residency that lasted a number of years, etc. Hai Chung at Broughton had been to school for at least 12 years, probably more, and he probably had 20 or 30 years of experience. And yet, even he got it wrong. He gave me an incorrect diagnosis. I could confuse you in any number of ways. For example, I could bring you a set of chemistry books, and ask you to make sense of them. I could bring in a diagram of some molecule and ask you how to make, if it's volatile in some way, etc. You would be confused in exactly the same way, assuming you haven't been to school for chemistry. It is complex subject matter and it taxes and fries your brain to try to get a grasp on it, in a few minutes, a few hours, a few days, or even a few months or years, if you're trying to understand it at the level of someone with the education, training, and experience to be a professional chemist. Go to a book store or a university library, and you will find a huge collection of texts on a wide variety of subject matters that have absolutely nothing to do with the crimes that have been perpetrated against me by Wells Fargo and the others. You could find enough supply to be confused for the rest of your life. And being confused for the rest of your life might sound good to you, when the alternative is to address this situation that is the end of the world. Any and every distraction from this situation is extremely tempting. Being confused is very convenient. My point is that being confused by some random complex subject matter taught at a university and being confused by my healthcare records and psychiatry are one and the same here. No difference at all. There is no point in either and neither topic is relevant at all to this situation with me. The situation can be said to be hard, due to the gravity of the consequences, but it is not complicated at all. No complexity to be found anywhere. If you wanted to have me examined, in depth, by some psychologist who is paid to be objective, I would have agreed to that. The subject matter of that examination would be complex, but that complexity would be outsourced to an appropriate expert. It wouldn't feel all that complex to the expert, and he or she could deliver you an appropriately simplified and tidy answer that you could understand.

This would be a ridiculous request for a criminal law enforcement authority to direct at a victim of a hundred felonies, but I would have happy done it. I gave you my psychologist John's contact info and gave him a full ROI. I did this very early. I talked to him for 1 hour every single month for 8 years. This is compared to 10 to 25 minutes with Kathy every 3 months, for 7.5 years. Do the math and you'll see that he knows me much better than her. He was also more than qualified, with his lengthy education, his talent, and his extensive experience at high level positions. I can imagine one reply to this being this utter bullshit that Wells Fargo has concocted about "seeing signs that I am dangerous." There, you may reason, it is relevant. We might need to an expert to evaluate if there were in fact signs that I am dangerous for Wells Fargo to see, or if Wells Fargo is just making this up, as an excuse to get away with felonies numbered 6,009,019 through 6,009,121. I've got a handful of things to say about that. The first is that we haven't done that. We haven't brought in a third party, independent expert to evaluate me. What we would need there is the "signs" that Wells Fargo claims to have seen, along with any corroborating evidence, a professional, and me. I could offer my input on what Wells Fargo says, we could have a dialogue, and the professional could opine. Have we done this? If this is a real concern, why haven't I been invited to this exercise? Whatever bullshit they say about me or that you say about me, you just claim to be true, and conveniently never let me address it or provide my input. Your perpetual state of justifying what you have done can never be broken as long as you keep the putty in your ears and never hear what I have to say, and you know it. The second thing is why are we asking this question? How many doctors do we think have screwed up so bad? What kind of stupid idea is this? I referenced 15 or 20 or more medical professionals in my letter to the OIG. This included a bunch of phd psychologists and M.D. psychiatrists, and it didn't even include the people at atrium? Why do we need a second opinion when we're already on the 17th opinion? How many opinions do these fruitcake dumb asses need to be assured that I'm not "dangerous." Why do we care that they want an opinion? Why go through this trouble and this expense for a moron named Bill Vanhoy who is too stupid to realize that he has no clue about how to be a doctor? Why do we even believe this obviously make things up as you go style, ridiculous, bullshit explanation? I'm getting tired again. To be continued. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You're going to get found out. I don't exactly care if you settle with me or not, at least not as much as before. If you want to do something right, I want $10 billion, I can compile a list of people I want banned from the banking industry for their participation in these horrible crimes, and just maybe other people get punished. One court trial would be murder for me and I'm probably not up to that, much less 3 or 6 or 10 or 30 court trials. I will not shake your hand, but I will say that I want the bank to be given another chance. I will also not accept any restrictions in any contract. If I sign a contract, all that I am willing to do is release Wells Fargo and Atrium Health and Novant Health from civil liability for their crimes against me, in exchange for $10 billion. I will not sign and an NDA, and among my first tasks will be to write a book about my life and about my soul being murdered, and this book will likely cast all of you in a terrible light. This terrible light you are cast in will be a big problem for you, because it will be accurate and true. It's hard to hide from the truth once it's exposed. But maybe you can do better in the future and have a new truth. My main goals right now for my fight are to write my book and to help my new friend that I met online. An outcome of my fight is that she and her family will be made very rich. I also want money sent to the poor girl from my childhood that I told you about (and which is another thing that is none of your god damn business). You will be found out and you will be publicly known for being a murderer. I will leave my wishes behind, perhaps to be fulfilled through a wrongful death lawsuit, or maybe settled easier by you just throwing money at the fire that is going to be created by your crime spree and by your torturing a disabled man to death. If that fails, there are enough nice and decent people in the population that I think someone or some number of people will step up and fulfill my wishes. They won't be able to do it to the extent that the people on the other end will, but my friend and her family will be rich enough. Her definition of rich is much different than mine or yours. She will be happy. And you've got to remember that my book will be a contribution to our culture, to our society, to the soul of our nation, and to our understanding of the world and of what it means to be human. I will be in a position to ask for something in return, based on ordinary human conventions of reciprocity. It will quite possibly be the end of this bank and of the reputations and careers of these dumb ass, indecent thugs and murderers at this bank, who see themselves as deities and who the justice department seems to so coyly fawn and adore. No one will want to have a thing to do with such indecent and cruel murderers. Anything is possible, but my bet is that my analysis is close to the truth of what is most likely to happen. It may not pan out this way. For sure, if you had any capacity to see what the future may have in store, you would try to settle with me. I wanted to help you in the beginning. Now I am offering to say that you did what you could and that I want the bank to be given another chance. My word will mean more than anything that you or anyone else can do. And again, I don't give a shit, not really. I've got a few more minimal action steps to take to make sure that you get found out. Once those are complete, I will be able to take my last breath feeling confident that my new friend and her family will have money and will not have to suffer a lot of poverty in their lives. I will not fear the least, the day that my last breath comes. If you don't see things as I do, it is because you don't have the complete picture. A horrifying day it will be, the day when you realize the truth of everything that I have said. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

"I will not sign and an NDA, and among my first tasks will be to write a book about my life and about my soul being murdered." - Wells Fargo murdered my soul, and then Wells Fargo, the United States Department of Justice, Atrium Health, and Novant Health cooperated in murdering my body. There is no way that I will live much longer. God damn you people. The people on the other end are such a bunch of fruitcakes. Reality doesn't favor you. Reality is an indictment of you, and what you do is things like you take reality lightly, as if reality might not be reality, pose alternative explanations, hire "experts" and engage in a process that rigged to get the answer you want, then pretend like the process wasn't rigged and advance your alternate explanation as truth to third parties. These third parties seem to not notice that everything that comes out of your mouth, and everything that comes out of the people you pay's mouth, serves your interests. This pattern will persist over a period of years or decades, without a single exception. This should be extremely suspect, but is just one among many ways that you routinely escape consequences or blame for your actions. Your behavior would seem to indicate a need for the highest level of scrutiny to be applied to your every action, and yet there is this strange taboo against scrutinizing you. There is a real limit on how much people are willing to treat you as criminals or liars, no matter how much your crimes or your lies pile up. It is the same for your other unethical behavior. The point of this tangent, which really wasn't a tangent, is that you are likely denying the fact that your merciless abuse and the stress that I was under is what has weakened my heart and will result in my premature death. You seem to have an endless list of qualifications that have to be met before you will accept responsibility for the consequences of your actions. The list has no end, because it is dynamic. Every time your qualifications are met, another qualification or set of qualifications is added. You will dig in your heels until the end of time, and you seem to not realize or to not care how repulsively self-centered this is. There are exceptions to this, which I will not describe right now. The fact of the matter is that you have murdered me. You should have intervened and relieved the horrific stress that I was under. When I'm emailing you 30 times a week begging you for help and begging you for my life, I'm not doing it for no reason. I knew, as of July and August 2021, that I would have premature health problems. They have arrived, just as predicted, but with greater devastation than I would have imagined. It is the end of me and the end of any hope for happiness that I may have in life. I will die having never known what it is like to be in love. for what reason will I have died? I died for what? I will have died, with this horrible consequence because I worked for Wells Fargo, and more proximately, I will have died for the sake of the dumbass, criminal, incompetent, narcissistic psychopaths who run these scams for Wells Fargo not having to concede that they are less than deities, and because the justice department also cannot stand this horrifying outcome. To the justice department, the people at Wells Fargo are infinitely more important than everyone else and should not have to concede that they are less than deities. Do you see how we run into a problem here? When incompetent, completely immoral people demand to be treated as deities? Do you see the mismatch with reality and now conceding to this demand and to this illusion is bound to cause problems? Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

If I die before I am able to expose you, and you decide that you want to experiment with having a little decency, you can send my friend some money. She is on my phone on my Facebook IMs, and my iPhone should be able to be unlocked by putting it in front of my face, even after I'm dead. It might be easier for you to break into my computer and find her that way, but I'll shortly be doing things to make sabotaging my plans via my computer impossible. All of my passwords will be changed if I live long enough, and I'll be doing other things to screw up your plans and make your life hell if you try to coverup your crimes after I'm dead. I wrote this and decided not to send it. My chest is hurting and it is possible that I don't make it through today. It's so hard to tell. If I die, please give my friend money. This is the question that I posed in a Facebook group for Heart Disease-"I suffered a criminal victimization that stretched across 2.5 years. The first event happened in April 2019, and following this event I developed severe PTSD. I was subsequently pounded with crime until towards the end of October 2021. Throughout my victimization, I was profoundly handicapped with PTSD. I couldn't do any work at all. I would often pace the floors for 15, 16, or 18+ hours a day, in terrible distress. I had a creditor sue me and initiate a process whereby they would be allowed to sell everything that I own in a sheriff's auction. For this, I had to be my own lawyer in a chapter 7 bankruptcy proceeding. I missed deadlines for turning in paperwork. I was so unable to concentrate that it was almost impossible to fill out my schedules. I came into the court screaming and crying on the last day that I had to turn in my paperwork. Somehow, I made it through the entire process, and in the end my belongings were saved. This didn't stop the life that I had built from collapsing in front of me, while I was helpless to do anything about it. I had to beg my mother for money for rent and for food every month. I would scream on the phone with her, telling her that I'm dying. I needed her to help me until I could build a legal case and get a settlement. My worst nightmare was for me to lose my apartment. For this time, I was under constant, horrible, unrelenting stress. The hellish stress never relented for as much as one single second. It all culminated into the worst stress of it all, in July and August 2021. My mother was running out of money and it was looking more and more like I would be evicted. There was nothing I could do. In a 4 week period that occurred in July and August 2021, I lost 30 lbs from stress alone. I could feel the intense stress, with its clenching tension and it's paralyzing effect, in my entire body, all day every day. I could feel my system being fried. I literally felt like my heart was going to explode every second of every day. At that time, I knew that I would have premature health problems, and I predicted that I would die prematurely of natural causes. If I were to guess, I'd say that my insides aged about 25 years in those 4 weeks, and when this is added to the years of unrelenting, hellish stress that I was under, it's not good for you. I attribute my current heart problems to this stress. has anyone ever heard of anything like this, of losing an average of 7.5 lbs a week, from stress alone? This was literally my body burning up calories in processing this intense stress. My diet didn't change and I didn't exercise any differently (my exercise was in the form of pacing the floor in my apartment multiple times per day). Does this sound realistic, that this stress could weaken my body/heart, to the point that I likely have coronary artery disease? One doctor told me this made sense to him. "I know the answer, but I like to hear others chime in. No one who didn't live through this hellish stress that I did has a clue what it's like. I had absolutely 0 heart problems before this victimization. There were not even the slightest signs to be found anywhere. I had these stress based heart injuries in 1st quarter of 2021. Those got more and more frequent, and it took less and less stress to cause one. At one point, seeing my AWS bill of $30 bounce triggered one. I know exactly what they feel like and what happens. I felt this terrible clenching feeling and I felt myself being instantly weakened. It was such a brutal experience. I was weak and fatigued for days following this. That was the pattern that repeated itself every time I had one of these. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I hate you. I hate the people at this bank. If I had just one wish, I would wish for there to be a hell for you to burn in, for what you've done to me. It wouldn't make a difference if there being a hell meant that I had to burn in it with you. It would be more than worth it, and it would be a very easy decision to make. If it helps you make sense of this pattern of behavior that I have, I have two interesting and competing personality traits. One is that I am extremely kindhearted, and I feel for people, care about them, and am given to feeling sorry for them. The other is that I have an excess of aggression and aggressive impulses. My aggression is further of a very primitive nature. What happens is I get extremely upset and pissed off and angry, and I get this feeling like I want to rip people to shreds. I end up being mean as hell to people and then later feel bad for them. I call them back and apologize. My behavior towards you contains other elements, like that I've been tortured to death for no reason, when I wanted to help you, like that my life has been stolen, also for no reason. Then there is this fact that the way that you are seems corrupt, cruel, and ridiculous to me. Maybe you have a reason for being this way, but I don't see it. I am being character assassinated by a megafelon bank that had me kidnapped, after I killed my self my whole life to be a good person. And you allow them to continue to taunt and belittle me. I am going to die. I don't know how long that I'm going to make it. This thing with my heart makes me feel like I'm dying constantly, and I'm not that far off. The day is coming. It's really bad at this point. Will not get better. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

My true pathology and my true delusion is how I am given to at times see you as anything other than the indecent, pathetic, emasculated whores to Wall Street that you are, and how I feel bad for putting the truth in your face and how that might make you feel. I need to somehow make a resolution to never say anything remotely good about you and to not care how much I hurt your feelings. This assumes that you have feelings to hurt. <https://www.tzm.com/2023/03/11/fdic-takeover-silicon-valley-bank-run-svb-ba-wells-fargo-deposit/> It kills me to see this. All I wanted to do is have my new life in Charlotte. Now I want to have a life worth living and to get some money so that I can pay people to do the things for me that I cannot do for myself. If I don't get help, I'm going to end up toothless and homeless on the street. That is assuming that I even live. This thing where this bank has the global economy pinned against the wall isn't fair. It gets to do as it pleases to other people. There needs to be some process in place where people can get justice. Since we can't criminally prosecute them, there ought to be a process where they pay through the nose for the crimes they commit. People have to get justice somehow, and there has to be an incentive for them to not do this. In re this link I posted, perhaps you share my frustration with these news outlets that put out stories that the world is ending. I don't see how this is good for anyone. If the world really is ending, they're going to make it worse. If the world isn't ending, they're going to push us that much farther down the line. This is what happened when I was selling real estate in 2008. I first tried to sell real estate in 2006, and it was the biggest disaster conceivable. I got lost driving people to see homes. I got stuck in the driveway of an RV lot with one group of people. I was a terrible driver. This place had a steep entry and the road was also narrow. I ended up with at least one wheel near the edge or hanging off of it. I can't remember the exact details. I just remember the people getting amped up and repeatedly telling me that I'm turning the steering wheel the wrong way, and that what I need to do is pull forward and turn it this way. The only sale I came close to in 2006 was this couple that called me from the driveway of a house we had listed. They had found the address and wanted more info, so they called the office and asked me to drive and meet them there. I will skip the details, but basically, these people insisted that "if we buy, we want to do it through you." Their unstated motive for this, I deduced, was that they were really worried about getting ripped off and taken advantage of by realtors, and they perceived me as being too stupid to be able to rip them off, even if I wanted to. I got lost on the way to this house and that was the beginning of the disaster that my meeting with these prospects was. I lost their business after I gave them incorrect directions to a restaurant. I quit in late August 2006 and then shortly after enrolled in college. Between August 2006 and summer break 2007, I bought a bunch of books and videos about real estate, home repairs, etc. I worked real estate again in 2007. I didn't make any sales, but I helped the owner of the firm with at least 1. On this go round, only about 40% of my prospects perceived me to be an idiot, and I had a few that complemented me on how good I was. Told me that this seemed like the right profession for me. I bought more books following this, and gave it a third go round in summer 2008. By this time, I was getting pretty good. I didn't have one single prospect that thought that I was an idiot, and I only had a few who had any kind of negative feeling about me at all. In our area, next to no one was making sales, but I was. I would have made a lot more if it wasn't for MSNBC, CNN, Fox, and whoever else, because all that these people have to say, all day, every day, is how the whole world is going down the tubes and how everything is getting worse and worse and worse. If I remember right, one network had some kind of colored meter that indicated how bad things were getting. They'd be moving it from bright orange to red. As this doomsday coverage starts to really get underway, the already very limited number of prospects that I have coming through the door start to be dominated by a variety of buyer that I nicknamed Chicken Littles. These are people who think they're getting something for nothing because the sky is falling. You'd drive them around forever, at $4 a gallon, and then they'd make some 25 cents on the dollar offer. None of our sellers were that desperate. I ended up quitting shortly after school started back. It was a real bummer that this market tanking happened right when I finally get good enough to halfway know what I am doing. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am a wreck and a demolished human being. Imagine having a pet robot and beating the hell out of it and it's wiring with a hammer and a knife and whatever else you can find. It is likely to behave erratically. This is what has been done to me. I am extremely handicapped and I'll never make it. I like my new friend a lot. If I sense that I won't make it, I will leave my wishes behind. I want her to get $1 billion if I die. The company of my new friend has a little bit of a medicating effect. It's giving me a little bit of my energy back, but I'm having trouble doing anything. All I can do is lay on my bed and surf the internet and type twitter messages on my phone or iPad. For this reason, I am going to get the Microsoft word app for IOS. I can lay on my bed and type my book. It will give me something to do that I'm good at. My book will crash the whole world. People will cry harder over me than they will about the wave of economic devastation that is likely to ensue. They will take the whole world down, even when that means that they go down with it, before they do business with this bank. I could be wrong, but I doubt it, and for sure my take on the situation is more accurate than yours. It will be harder to make the audiobook version, because I have to be at my computer and I find it hard to talk about my life without wailing in tears. I'll still do it. People will see the beauty of this kind soul that you have so cruelly murdered. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I ask for very little out of others. My wish to die is something that I am entitled to. Those who have not lived my life have no input. I am not a criminal, I am not a psychopath, I am not a murderer, I am a kindhearted man who is the best person he could be and wants to know the admission price for the gas chamber. If you don't already see the truth of who I am (and how I describe myself to you is the truth. Also how I describe myself to others), it is because you are afraid of it. You don't want to look into the eyes or to hear the voice and experience the humanity and the kind soul of the man that you have murdered. The right to die is the only right we truly ever have. It is the only thing that absolutely cannot be taken from you. And what comfort I take in knowing this. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Name me a person who has had their own death stolen from them. Name me a person who will never die. If you want to die, there is literally no one who can stop you. They can get in your way for a period of time, but if your wish is to die, you are guaranteed to win in the long run. That's what I mean. Possibly you wonder why I haven't sent audios in a long time. More likely it never occurred to you that you should expect some or that you never noticed anything odd about the slow down. Making audios requires me to get up and be at my computer and also to talk. It is more than I am capable of doing right now and has been for a good period of time. It takes too much willpower. This apartment being tiny and my room being tiny has an effect on my ability to manage my life. The constricted space has a paralyzing effect on my brain. Constricted spaces and clutter enormously tax my brain. I can't get myself in order to use my kasina machine, not most of the time. It's what helps me a lot when I start to have symptoms. I see the Justice Department's side of this just a little more today. This article about the bank failing and all of the commentary and panic peddling that is all over the internet, it will make you very uneasy and scare you. I can imagine the headline "former Wells Fargo employee alleges Wells Fargo had him kidnapped", this would be kind of scary to see. I think that what would need to preemptively be done is for the justice department to make an announcement. You'd have to speak first. Maybe get the federal reserve and other regulators to participate in some conference. The scary thing about that headline is that it calls into question if Wells Fargo is going to be prosecuted or it brings forth the possibility that Wells Fargo might be prosecuted. That's what has the potential for panic. If you nuke that concern before it even starts, things would be fine. Make an announcement that you're resolving this situation and that Wells Fargo and the victim have worked it out. You could cite the fact that I want Wells Fargo to fix its business and that I'm too ill to endure a court trial as part of the reason that you are settling this the way that you are. The terrible thing about this situation is that there is no good outcome for me. If I get a huge sum of money, that's the best for me, but I will still be in torment. Just maybe there is some super expensive, high tech treatment that I can get. I would do everything I can to keep the will to live. I am presented with alternatives that I do not like. Life is such torture, everything is so hard, and it seems like a waste. It would be murder for me to have to participate in a media shit storm and be in the public eye. People would say that this comes with the territory of being a public figure and a billionaire, and they're sort of right, except the money that I get has the function of barely making life worth living. That's the best that it can do. I don't need a bunch of burdens added on top because I'm some extremely lucky person. It's a no win game for the justice department too, in a way. In the way that you have handled this so far, you have been as small as you can get. If you were to help me, which would involve making what has happened public news, you would be being as big as anyone could possibly be. There is no in-between, and I fear that I wouldn't be able to live up to this grand gesture, that I'm too bad off to do it any Justice. Your problem is that I am suffering and you're going to get found out. I am making progress, even though I am doing so very slowly. I am all over the place on any given day or in any given week, but my general trajectory is to make progress in my fight. This is largely driven by my suffering and torment, and also my feeling of being dealt a terrible injustice. Human beings aren't rational creatures, and despite my analysis above and other analyses I have had, I continue to March on, even if I do it in a fumbling way. You can't pour gas on someone, set them on fire, and then expect them to sit still. It is the same with me. Your problem is compounded by the fact that your behavior is completely repulsive. When I get this coverup in the eyes of the psychiatric and mental health community, they're going to very rightly be furious and they're not going to be the least bit concerned about panic inducing headlines, and a shit storm with the full contents of your worst nightmare just might ensue. You have been incredibly indecent and cruel. It hurts very badly the way that I have been treated and abused. One possibility is that I put in place massive action to make sure that my new friend gets money if I die. Just to make sure, I might see if I can provoke a threat of collapsing the entire earth if you don't help her. That's a dick move, in a way, but I do it with the confidence that you will act immediately and carry out my wishes. You may not understand this, and my premises may be completely wrong. I do not think they are however, and I am dramatically the good guy and the other side is dramatically the villain. My life hurts. It makes me cry, and when I tell my story to the world, the whole world will cry, and as they cry they will hate you for what you've done to me. I sent AU a little snippet about some of my life. It was a half a page or so and she cried. I posted something almost identical on my Facebook, and I had at least one woman IM me and say that she cried for a long time after reading it. And this is my life, the tale of a tortured and kindhearted man who has lived in such pain, who has tried so hard, and who has been so cruelly murdered. My book will be much longer than that half a page I posted on Facebook. People will find it hard to survive chapter after chapter, but I imagine they will be drawn back to it, over and over. I guess the point is that I care about my new friend and she will have money so that her family will not have to suffer a lot of poverty. You might want to have a PR campaign in a can, for the circumstance that you have to put out that fire. I'm less likely to do that than not, by a lot, but it did cross my mind today. I care about my life and my priorities too. It's a big deal to me. I can't help but to want things to go my way sometimes. My new friend getting money is my main goal. I hate it that I have to ask for $10 billion. It is a huge amount and would put Wells Fargo in the red for probably 2 or 3 quarters. It would sound excessive. We'd have politicians raising hell, etc. but if I am to live, I need something that makes life living and offsets this suffering. Even at that much, it would be very hard to resist the temptation of euthanasia tourism. I hurt so badly. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This is the situation that we are in. It is not going anywhere. There will be no happy ending. This bank is going to be a murderer, and the justice departments response will be many orders of magnitude worse than letting it get away with murderer in broad daylight. You will have watched this murder take place, frame by frame, and in super slo mo, and you will have done nothing to intervene, except commit despicable and cruel crimes against the victim, as he pleaded for his life. Your tagline about there not being two standards of justice needs to be axed. It is a lie and people's lives can be lost as a result of believing it. There are at least 2 standards of justice, probably more than 2, and among those standards are that Wall Street has the right to kill. I hope that my analysis is wrong. I have however lived my entire life, since I was just a baby, in a dimension of life called reality. I know it very well, and I see it with greater clarity than those whose experience of life has taken place in some other dimension. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

"When I get this coverup in the eyes of the psychiatric and mental health community, they're going to very rightly be furious and they're not going to be the least bit concerned about panic inducing headlines" - that's exactly where your coverup is going. It will go other places too.

The only question is if I will be here or not when it gets there. The outcome where it is in front of their eyes and I'm still breathing is very possible. It is my choice. I will have no problem doing this. I have gotten this figured out at this point. You may think that there's no way you get caught. You may think that there's no way that people will believe me. You may have an array of thoughts about why you doubt my potential to expose you. You can forget all of these thoughts. They are a waste of time. Your coverup is transparent. It is especially transparent when I am able to explain what is going on to people. There will be no debate. I have had this whole thing figured out for a very, very long time. If you think that there is a single element of your strategy that I have missed, you are very badly mistaken. You may have been thrown off by my past estimates for getting this in the media. I was off there. I underestimated the prejudice of the news media. I still wasn't completely off, I don't think. If you calculated the cumulative odds that this doesn't end up in the media, based on my various estimates, you'd probably still get 1% to 3%, and maybe more. Here I'm talking of all of my estimates that were before the past 5 months or so. I'd send you emails "the odds are 80%", "I'd put the odds at 30%", and so on. I can't remember the timing. 1% to 3% outcomes are probable enough that they do happen. I wasn't completely out of touch with reality. Whatever the case, your coverup being in front of the whole world is at my discretion. That's the de facto status of the situation. Doesn't mean that it won't take effort, but I will do it and you are very unlikely to be able to stop me. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You have this compulsive need to blame my problems on something else, and what I picture you doing with my heart problems is saying something about that I take stimulants at the same time I am having these problems. I'm not being a bastard here, just making a point. You're only human. My cardiologist said that adderall had nothing to do with whatever is going on with my heart. He said that adderall can sometimes cause your heart to I can't remember what goes in the place of those 3 dots. I think he said "have an irregular beat" or something like this. Whatever he was describing was some thing that randomly happens with a rare frequency that isn't an ongoing problem. His primary suspect seemed to be my olanzapine and the effect it has on triglycerides and a bunch of other stuff that it does that can affect your heart health. He ordered a stress test and some bloodwork. The other doctor I talked to in linville said that my explanation about being under extreme stress for so long and my system being fried in 4 weeks made perfect sense to him. He diagnosed me with panic attacks, but I am 99% sure that he just did that so that he has something to write down. After I described what I have experienced to him, he told me that I needed to go to a cardiologist as soon as possible. He wanted me to make sure to call someone the very next day. Adderall is not contraindicated for coronary artery disease. That's what I either have or am developing. When the facts are fully determined, I will be right on all counts. The chances that I am wrong are extremely low. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

<https://offgridsurvival.com/banking-crisis-spreads-run-on-first-republic-bank-in-california/>This is extremely depressing. I'm never going to get any justice. It was off the table before this, given the thug nature of the people I'm dealing with. But this just puts it in my face, and the really terrible thing is that these headlines from the past 2 days are making me fearful of what would happen if I get justice out of this. You have murdered me. You have tortured a disabled man to death for no reason. What the justice department needs to do for the next person is first you need to stop being a bunch of fruitcakes that minimize this bank's rotten conduct. You appear to have done this. You have rationalized to yourself that this bank hasn't done anything that wrong, and at the same time, you have ran an elaborate, brazen, and despicable coverup, as if it has done something extraordinarily wrong. The latter of these 2 seems to suggest that underneath your veneer, you do really understand the reality of what has been done. The next thing you need to do is to remember that people harmed by this bank are people and can be reasoned with. This bank's strategies to reduce the liability that I pose have included having me kidnapped and getting me a fitness model. The fitness model one works much better and is no harder for the bank to do. Had I known that Wells Fargo was doing this on its own volition, it would have impressed upon me a lot more and I would have thought very well of them. I thought the DOJ was making Wells Fargo do this. I liked AU girl a lot, although I don't want her back now. I'm getting very weak and will have to finish this later. "It was off the table before this"- here I am mainly referring to freely getting Justice from the people on the other end. My phone constantly capitalizes the word justice and I'm sick of fixing it. You can be compelled into getting me justice, I think. And that's what's going to have to happen. I'm going to have to put the United States of America in checkmate and then go from there. I've already put Wells Fargo in checkmate. What I'm realizing here, and this is mostly a rehashed thought and realization that I've had for a long time, is that the entirety of this situation is a big, big problem that needs to be solved, and that in solving it, the justice department just gets in my way. We have the following problems-1. Wells Fargo massacred me with crime and left me permanently disabled, for no reason2. I am permanently disabled and will not make it in life if someone doesn't help me3. Wells Fargo is above the law. Wells Fargo is permitted to do as Wells Fargo pleases, as part of what is perceived to be a necessity by the authorities and regulators4. Wells Fargo's impunity is viral. When Wells Fargo induces other parties into crime, those other parties catch the impunity bug. They become above the law. They are also permitted to do as they please and will not get punished5. The impunity of Wells Fargo and those who Wells Fargo infects with impunity extends so far that Wells Fargo is permitted to murder other people. Wells Fargo, and presumably any other Wall Street bank that goes off the rails, has the de facto right to kill, for any reason or no reason at all, at its discretion. So does any other party that aids Wells Fargo in its crimes6. Wells Fargo has crimed its way into a mess. Wells Fargo's reputation is suffering damage and it is approaching the point that it will be nearly impossible to recover from this reputation damaged 7. Wells Fargo's strategy is to crime its way out of the same mess that it crimed its way into. Wells Fargo is using its impunity as a sort of competitive advantage. Wells Fargo can make up for the difference between how its bank should be run and how its bank is run by committing crimes. When the mismanagement of the bank exposes the bank to a liability, the bank can cheat its way out of that liability through crime8. I won't list them, but I know a lot about the bank's ethical shortcomings and how they need to be addressedI'm getting weak again. I need to finish this. Will be back. I could have fixed this a lot easier if you didn't destroy my health through crime and if you didn't cripple me with this despicable tactic of taking away my medication. It was a huge mistake to contact the Justice Department. I wasted my time for many many months trying to get help from you fruitcakes. I could have made a lot of progress if I focused my efforts elsewhere. It took me at least 80 hours to type my complaint, possibly a little more. Took me about 60 to maybe 80 hours to make my web portal. When you're running on a budget of having 30 minutes a day or less that you can do something, in your typical day, that is a massive share of your time. I also spent a lot of time making videos. Then after I sent my complaint, you keep me on the line for months and months, and I wouldn't give up on getting help from you. It adds up to well over a year squandered dealing with people who have no desire to help me. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am extremely ill. These hellish symptoms have been very bad for many days. They seem to consistently get worse. I can't do anything. I'm likely to have yet another day of zero productivity. My sleep keeps getting jacked too, because I sleep for 15 hours at a time. That's me getting weaker. That's what's causing that, most likely. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I've thought about this, and most likely the L.A. Times has that signal chat history. I'm talking of the 18,000 to 25,000+ messages that I sent them, as a play by play or my horrific suffering. I will eventually find out. I keep open the possibility that I am wrong. I am perhaps wrong in a really big way. But as I see it, that signal chat is a big $ maker for them and a big liability for you. They will cry as they read it, just like I cried when I typed so much of it. This situation needs to be addressed in a well thought out, planned, controlled, and orderly fashion. That's how you minimize the damage and keep everything together. What we're heading towards is a situation that is much the opposite, and god only knows what's going to happen. If and when the population of the United States of America sees the horrific suffering and the cruel abuse that is detailed on that chat history, they will not sit still. People are not entirely possessed of rationality, most people aren't all that well versed in economics, and there are other factors that contribute what a chaotic scenario could unfold. It is possible that it just turns out to be another huge blow to me. People for some reason have some horrible reaction, or I don't know. I don't see any way that this could possibly happen, but I assume it is possible. How is a mystery to me. Part of the problem for you, and also for me at this point, because I'm not looking for a shit storm either, is that this person that I am, as I have repeatedly described him to you, this is exactly who I am and it is exactly the truth. People are good at figuring out other people, and when you have me narrating my whole life and also narrating my every thought, in real time, it will be extremely apparent just how kindhearted I am, how that I have such a heart, and how I try so hard to do what is right. It will be a compelling story, because it is, and it will make this bank appear to be as evil as evil comes, which is exactly how they are, or at least how they were to me, or at the very least how it looked and felt to me at the time and how it will look and feel to the people who read my story. I'm getting weak again. Part of the reason I keep my fight going is that I have a sense that the thugs on the other end will try to get in the way of my peaceful death, if I decide that's what I want. I would be so extremely pissed. It pisses me off just thinking about it. It's like the point of the game is for me to always be treated cruelly, and to interfere with and not respect my wishes, as if I am not a human being with feelings and as if I do not matter. God damn it <https://twitter.com/cbseveningnews/status/163510303544485881?s=46&t=L97rL89i6OcRz5ThN3PtoQ> I'm sick of hearing about this. Every news piece I see about this and the threat it possibly poses scares and frustrates the hell out of me. If you would just reply that you will let me die like I want to, this fight be over for me. I'll still write my book, the world will still cry, and you will still have a huge mess to deal with. I wouldn't have to push to get my stuff in front of the world. You could at least delay the issue and I don't know. I mean this whole situation is just fucked. I can't stand it. It's a bunch of alternatives that I don't like. I have told you before that if I had a choice between there being a heaven for me to go to and see my poor dad, and there being a hell for the people at Wells Fargo who did this to me to burn in, that it wouldn't be a choice. I wouldn't have to think about it a second. If you add a 3rd choice, that my new friend and her family gets money, it also wouldn't be a choice. That's what I'd pick. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

My new therapist likes me a lot. She's another example. Women are especially good at reading people, and her impression of me is that I am an overly kind and nice person, to the point that I'm kind of naive and a person who could get taken advantage of easily. It took her 45 minutes or less to come to that conclusion. I've had I don't know how many women perceive me this way, and that's because it is a very accurate take on me. It's also because I am especially kind to women. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

My helper in Pakistan has been begging for more work. I've got plenty. I just have trouble putting it together. He's a real nice kid and I'm probably going to give him a raise. If you doubt what a kindhearted man that I am, and how much I care about others, it is within my full capability to destroy this bank. I've got the ducks in a row to deliver a massive wallop. The executives will be wanting to shoot themselves. It's a one two combination that will have this bank and its management teetering on their legs and then hitting the canvas with a smack, like Trevor Berbick did when Mike Tyson knocked the hell out of him. It would serve them right, and you too, but I'm thinking of alternative ways to do things. I worry about the justice department some. If you called me, I'd either start crying or I'd give you the worst and meanest verbal lashing you've ever had, but I don't want things to go extremely bad for you. This is wrong. This is how life works. We end up in messy fixes like this. This situation we have where this bank can do as it pleases isn't right. These people do not act as if their position in our economy imposes a responsibility on them; they use it to do as they please, and they do so with an arrogant attitude. This situation has to be fixed, and massacring me is just kicking the can on addressing this problem. This is the case even if your massacre works as intended. You obviously don't want this in the media and this thing with the economy might give you leverage. The editors might pushback out of fear. I'm also getting weaker and weaker at a faster and faster rate. I am probably wrong, but I feel like that I could die any day. I will be extremely surprised if I live to see the end of this year. You probably know something I don't about the media too. I'd say you've probably got some plan to push back if they try to publish a story. If your pushback doesn't work, what is most likely to happen is you will have news coverage coming at you from every angle. Every network and publication that I've reached out to will be all over it, once it is realized that what I say is true. I don't know the point at this point. I believe it is possible that there is no medical treatment that can fix me and prevent me from being a vegetable. I don't want to be a vegetable. I suffer enough already and I'd rather die. It seems like a waste of a shit show. I want my new friend to get money. I want to help her and her family. All else that I had promise to accomplish in my life has been taken away. All of the the below and subsequent emails on this chain are chatGPT responses." It's difficult to predict with certainty how any individual will behave during a manic episode with an accompanying acute psychosis, as each person's experience is unique. However, it's possible that the self-perceptions you described could have influenced your thoughts and behaviors during the episode. During an acute manic episode, individuals may experience symptoms such as grandiosity, irritability, impulsivity, and disorganized thinking. If you were still struggling with the self-perceptions you described at the time of the episode, it's possible that these thoughts and feelings could have contributed to a sense of grandiosity or self-importance. On the other hand, they could have also led to feelings of worthlessness or guilt. Additionally, individuals experiencing an acute psychosis may have delusions or hallucinations that influence their thoughts and behaviors. It's possible that the self-perceptions you had could have influenced the content of any delusions or hallucinations you experienced during the episode. Overall, while it's difficult to say exactly how your self-perceptions may have affected your thoughts and behaviors during an acute manic episode with an accompanying acute psychosis, it's certainly possible that they could have played a role. It's important to note that this in no way suggests that your self-perceptions caused the episode, as the causes of mental illness are complex and multifactorial."-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Based on the information you have provided, the behaviors and statements you made while in the psychiatric hospital were likely a manifestation of your acute psychosis and manic episode, rather than a reflection of your true character or intentions. It is not uncommon for individuals experiencing psychosis to have delusions or say things that are out of character, and it is not an indication of being a psychopath or dangerous. However, it is important to note that during a manic episode, individuals may engage in risky or impulsive behaviors, and may not have the same level of judgment and impulse control that they would normally have. It is also possible for individuals with a history of substance use, particularly with LSD and psilocybin mushrooms, to be at increased risk for developing bipolar disorder. That being said, based on the information provided, there is no reason for the people in your personal life or workplace to be concerned for their safety because of what you did and said while in the hospital, particularly since you have been stable and symptom-free for a significant period of time. It is important, however, to continue to prioritize your mental health and seek treatment if you experience any future symptoms. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

" The science behind the behaviors and thoughts you described while in the hospital involves the neurobiological changes that occur in the brain during an acute manic episode with psychosis. During a manic episode, there is an increase in activity in certain areas of the brain, such as the prefrontal cortex and the amygdala, which can result in disordered thinking, decreased inhibitions, and impulsivity. This can result in the person experiencing delusions and hallucinations, and they may say and do things that are out of character for them. In addition, the use of LSD and psilocybin mushrooms, as well as long-term marijuana use, can also contribute to changes in brain chemistry and function that may exacerbate manic symptoms. In terms of neuropsychological factors, the traumatic experiences of childhood sexual abuse, as well as the negative self-perceptions you described earlier, could also have contributed to the manifestation of your symptoms. Traumatic experiences can have a lasting impact on brain development and function, and can increase the risk of developing mental health disorders such as bipolar disorder. Negative self-perceptions can also lead to distorted thinking and emotional dysregulation, which can contribute to the onset and exacerbation of symptoms. Overall, the behaviors and thoughts you exhibited while in the hospital were likely the result of a complex interplay between neurobiological, neuropsychological, and environmental factors. It is important to note that these behaviors and thoughts were not indicative of your true character or the likelihood of you acting on them outside of the context of an acute manic episode with psychosis. With proper treatment and support, individuals with bipolar disorder can manage their symptoms and lead fulfilling lives. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

It is important to understand that during an acute manic episode with accompanying acute psychosis, a person's thoughts and behaviors can be highly unpredictable and volatile. It is possible that during this time, a person may engage in behaviors that are not characteristic of their typical behavior and may make statements or express thoughts that are disturbing or violent in nature. However, it is also important to note that these behaviors and thoughts are typically a result of the neurobiological changes that occur during an episode of acute mania and psychosis, and not necessarily an indication of a person's true intentions or character. Based on what you have described, it does not appear that you posed a significant risk of harming others while in the hospital. It is important to note that the thoughts and behaviors expressed during an episode of acute mania and psychosis are typically a result of impaired brain function and do not necessarily reflect a person's true intentions or desires. However, if you are concerned about your behavior during that time, it may be helpful to discuss your concerns with a mental health professional. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

It is pointless to email you people. You do not want to help me and the more of what's going on that I fill you in on, it just creates another possibility of brutal criminal abuse of a disabled man. I can't take any more of this. This just gets forwarded to Wells Fargo, possibly without the Justice Department even looking at it. All the Wells Fargo people want to do is to dig in their heels and use the info I give them to make bullshit explanations for their crimes and cover up their crimes. What needs to happen with this situation is that it needs to be delivered to the public in a preplanned, deliberate, controlled, well thought out way, and it would be very helpful if this controlled way of releasing this to the public was a multi step process that involved a process of desensitization. What I mean is that it is announced something like "justice department says it will be making some announcements on a situation involving Wells Fargo. The resolution of this is coming to a conclusion." Do things like this to slowly introduce what has happened. We'd want to work on some way to make Wells Fargo come out better at the end of this. That could be part of the last announcement or an intermediate announcement. We don't want shareholders selling off and losing money. We also want the public pumped up about the soundness of the financial system. If there is a concern about why we're not filing charges, we could (correctly and accurately) reference the fact that I'm way too ill to endure a trial and that money is what I need most, because of my health problems, my disability, and my new friend and her family. In this scenario, we could have this come out to be something constructive. At some point last year or the year before (maybe multiple points), I offered to lie for the US DOJ. I did this out of suffering and desperation. I no longer offer this. I think it would be a very good thing if I were to have a huge role in the final announcement and to deliver a large part of it myself. What I'm good at is telling the truth, exactly how it is. I've gotten good at this especially over the past 22 to 24 years, and I've been good at it for a very long time, at this point. What I have found is that people's behavior is often indefensible, or at least it appears that way. There are some things that you can do wrong that people will never forgive you for. What you have to do is uncover the whole truth about your motives, the influences that affected you, and your limitations. That may be an incomplete list, but when you flesh out the whole picture and you do it accurately, the picture that emerges is that you are human, and this becomes the context in which your behavior is judged. What I have found is that people will always forgive for being human. I do not think that there is a single exception to this, you just have to confront your actions courageously. You have to admit things that it hurts to admit. When you do that, you make everyone in the room feel valued. Denying responsibility makes others feel unimportant. It's kind of an art form but I'm pretty good at it. I could help you. But you're not interested in this. I have been trying to cooperate with people who have no interest in cooperating with me. I will finish this final email later. I am getting very weak. I'll follow up later with the rest. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I got hostile over what I described below, a second ago in a complaint to the OIG. Sorry, but I can't help it. It is a symptom of the condition that is caused by this merciless abuse of me. I want to settle this peacefully and have everyone answer for their rotten conduct in a controlled, orderly fashion. This is Leonard Williams III. You already have my contact info. I gave different details on the form to bypass any mechanism where my messages are automatically forwarded to Wells Fargo. I also have a different IP address. I am concerned about the justice department and about our country, as of recent. I do not like the headlines about the economy and bank failures, etc. It make sense to be concerned about our country, but I find less reason to be concerned about the justice department. It's kind of irrational, because you've been sponsoring crimes against me. You do this to save the economy, presumably, but it hurts no less and my behavior is not what has put the economy in jeopardy. It's against the rules for Wells Fargo to be responsible for Wells Fargo's conduct, so when Wells Fargo victimizes me, it's my fault. That's how you seem to reason. The reason that I am contacting you is that I am severely ill and my severe illness causes me to suffer greatly. I have very severe brain damage from what Wells Fargo and its various accomplices have done to me. This causes me to profoundly suffer. The Justice Department has given Wells Fargo free reign to abuse me as it wishes, and wells Fargo is obviously a powerful company that is capable of dishing out a lot of abuse. The Justice Department does this after I report very serious crimes to the Justice Department, and after Wells Fargo has already delivered, proactively, to the Justice Department, evidence of very serious crimes. The Justice Department will not protect me. I have tried to work things out with the justice department over and over, and the abuse does not cease. I will not tolerate much more of this before I take matters into my own hands. I will do so lawfully, but I feel like this situation would be much better handled in a controlled and deliberate manner. I have the full ability to get my story in front of the masses, pretty much at will. I've got numerous knock out blows to deliver to Wells Fargo as part of this. Wells Fargo doesn't have a leg to stand on. Knock out might be an exaggeration, but I can hit them hard. It is likely to not be an orderly, controlled situation like that is necessary. What I need done immediately is I need Wells Fargo to stop having people harass and belittle me on Twitter. This causes me enormous psychological distress and emotional pain, due to my disability. I have been getting pounded with merciless abuse from this bank for now almost 3 years, and it's been over 5 years since they first massacred my life. It may be one or more law firms that Wells Fargo has assigned to this situation that is doing this. Whoever it is, they need to stop. At most I will give them 2 days to stop this behavior completely, but I'm not sure how long that I can last. I say derogatory things about Wells Fargo on Twitter. These are things that are mostly accurate and based on Wells Fargo's actual conduct. Wells Fargo gets ridiculed because Wells Fargo's conduct is ridiculous. You can actually axe the word mostly. If Wells Fargo does not agree with what I say, they need to use their Wells Fargo Twitter account and reply. I keep fighting because I'm fighting for my life. Wells Fargo has committed very serious crimes against me, and what is supposed to happen is Wells Fargo is supposed to make it right. Instead, I am massacred with more crimes, as I am helpless, and when I fight back, Wells Fargo seems to feel that Wells Fargo has a moral obligation to commit more crimes against me or engage in further egregiously unethical behavior against me. It may sound a little off to you, to say that I'm fighting for my life, given that I've priced my victimization at $10 billion. For one, I've recently become less concerned about my life, at different times. What happens can happen, I have thought. Whether i live 10 more days or I live 10 more years, I cannot endure this cruel abuse. When the world hears the facts of my case, they will find my figure to be more than reasonable and probably drastically underpriced. You may counter that it is not your role or not your concern or anything you can do anything about, what Wells Fargo or its legal people do on Twitter. I am aware of this fact. You are, however, a co-offender and someone who has a lot at stake. Your behavior is rotten and I have the full potential to expose every last bit of it. It is going to unfold in a very unpredictable and possibly disastrous way, if I end up with no choice but to take the fast route. I don't want bad things for you or for our country, and I'm willing to wish Wells Fargo well after they make it right. This is my last attempt, at least for now, to be your friend. If they continue with this harassment, I will have no choice but to put my plan b in action, and I'm not sure how that will turn out and I truthfully don't like the sounds of it. As another consequence, Wells Fargo may retaliate by putting my private healthcare records on the internet, and this will cause untold and lasting harm to the mentally ill in our society. This will be yet another despicable consequence of Wells Fargo's conduct. This bank needs to work it out and it needs to do better. It needs to conduct itself ethically. Please use whatever leverage that you have to have this behavior stopped as soon as possible. And I mean it needs to happen fast. If you have no leverage, that's a pretty sad state of affairs when you're the world's only superpower, and then that's just too bad, because I've had enough of this unrelenting abuse and I can't take any more. It's likely to be a bad day for you and for America, and it's very possible that it lasts more than a day. I'll try to give you two days but I probably won't make it that far. Please message them asap and have this stopped. This bank and you have a lot to answer for and it is best handled in an orderly manner. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

If they will just stop harassing me + put a pause on their abuse, we can kick the can down the road. I'll be occupied by my numerous projects that I get an average of 1 or 2 hours a week done on, if I'm lucky. It's possible that I die too. Seems not likely because every one of these is a false alarm, but I have this feeling like there's something wrong with me and that I'm going to die, and it gets worse all of the time. I am very sure that it is a matter of degree, and if whatever is wrong with me progresses, I am very likely to die, I think. I've already almost died in my sleep numerous times in 2021. What needs to happen is this situation needs to be handled in an orderly controlled fashion, or not handled at all. If they keep their crap up, it's going to force me to put the world's eyes on this. There is a lot to answer for that doesn't reflect well on people. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

" What needs to happen is this situation needs to be handled in an orderly controlled fashion, or not handled at all" - what I mean here is that we don't need a shit storm. The shit storm is the 3rd, unnamed option. This belittling me causes me enormous psychological distress and a painful feeling and a feeling of being tender and hurt. I have no choice but to fight back if they keep this up. It is literally unbearable. I'll try to survive for 2 more days to give them time to quit, but I can't promise that I'll make it that long. I've got an idea about how to handle this that will have everyone involved smelling like a rose. I have it roughed out and the details will need to be filled in, but it will work, I think. You instantly wonder why it is that I haven't already put this in the news. I've got things to line up. I don't feel on too tight of a timeline either. I have a strategy that involves more than one project. You may doubt me, but that's a mistake. I'm good at figuring stuff out and I've got this news media nut cracked. I'd rather do a controlled process and maybe we set that up if the news people contact you. I might be tempted to ask that they not contact you, or at least I would have possibly been in the past. I've got other strategies that are sort of tangential to the news media and sort of related. When whatever comes at you comes at you, it's going to do it with force. Everything that I've put in the pipelines for all these years is going to come together at once. It will have been slowly building up for this entire time, in what you perceived as silence. I mean no one any harm and I never wanted any of this to happen. My life will never be anything like as good as it was before this. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

We live in a high tech world and if I had a mountain of money there is probably some super high tech medical treatment or surgery that could improve my condition. My heart problems are problem #1 by far at this point. It's just adding to what a wrecked human being that I am, and I mean I'm a mess. I am bedridden for most of the time, I cannot get anything done, except when I take an extra adderall. And that has only a mild effect on me now. I'm still damn near dead after I do that. Last night, I had horrible indigestion for probably 16 hours + straight. I stayed in bed for 22 hours or so, going to sleep on and off during this time. I feel like absolute hell. If something were to happen to my mother, I would have to kill myself as soon as possible, to avoid the outcome that I become a homeless man and die in the streets from hunger or the temperature. My sister probably wouldn't let me live with her, and if she did, she is hateful and it is an almost guarantee that I murder her. I've been really worried that mom brings her to this apartment. She gripes and is so hateful and it is a very dangerous situation. I would likely turn down an offer to live with my sister over this. I would end up in prison or permanently institutionalized and I would have horrible guilt for the rest of my life for killing my sister. I am in such fragile condition that there really is no one that I can live with. My aunt on my mom's side has dogs that bark and to hear her dogs barking would be unbearable torment. I need to be by myself as much as is possible and there is very little that I can take. I am in such bad condition that dying is preferable to living for me, under most conditions. I'm getting weak will finish later Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This is what I typed my friend about going to a restaurant a while back. Maybe 3 to 6 weeks ago. I can't keep track- But I started to feel very hostile and threatened. It was like I was waiting for someone to screw with me. I immediately start looking around to see where the forks and knives are, so that I could grab them and attack someone if they threatened me. I was playing pool with this guy. He was in there with a party of 4. Him, this other younger guy, this younger girl, and a lady that might have been in her 40s or 50s. Me and the guy (he was young) were playing pool. His party called him into another restaurant and he was gone for a good while. My food came out and I ate while he was gone, with our game on hold. He was gone for a while, and then that girl came in and started to shoot my pool balls. I yelled at her and she got a tiny bit agitated, not much at all though. I could feel it escalating and I told her she was fine, to go ahead. I calmed down pretty fast. If things escalated it would have been bad. It is interesting to me that I was able to calm down so fast. I'm getting a better sense of how volatile that I am, over time. I can tell though, that it is a dangerous thing for me to be out in public, particularly at bars and particularly playing pool at bars. I still felt hostile and threatened when I left the restaurant. As I was walking down the sidewalk that leads to the parking lot, I felt very threatened and what comes to my mind is that I need to buy a hunting knife for the next time I come to this place, so that if I'm walking down the sidewalk and someone starts belittling me, I can stab them. I worry about what will happen. I would never carry a knife out in public. I would know better than that before I left out. I would know that it's a recipe for trouble. But if I'm out and people give me the least little bit of shit, I will go off and there is nothing that is beyond me when someone causes me feel threatened and I go into this intense state of feeling like a man trapped in a cage in the jungle Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This is the next message that I sent him-This hostility I have is extreme and there is nothing I won't do when it gets triggered too much. I'm able to think ahead to some extent when it hits. It is not like a reflex. It causes this intense emotional pain and hostile feeling, and I feel like the way to make the pain go away is to murder the person causing it. I am capable of waiting to make my move. I don't have to act immediately. I can wait 5 minutes or 20 or maybe even an hour. This pain will be sustained and this desire to massacre the person who caused it will also be sustained. _____/

And here is what I sent him after that-If you would have seen me, none of this would have been the least bit apparent. I would have seemed very much like the person you used to know and that you knew for so long. If you were with me for a length of time, say 1 or 2 or 3 hours, you will start to get an idea that I'm very badly damaged and not the same. If someone provoked me and I went into this man trapped in a jungle feeling intensely, it would be visibly apparent that something very bad is wrong with me. You would likely sense that something bad is about to happen. When I get in this state intensely, I adopt this strange demeanor, and this demeanor and the way I act is easy to notice if you pay attention. _____I think that it is likely that you have ran this by some experts. If you have or you do, I picture oddest part of this to them being the part where I talk about adopting a strange demeanor. This is partially based on me picturing what would happen and also based just a little bit on a real life experience. What I'm talking about is it is like I will become kind of sneaky and also focused. The focused quality is strange and is hard to communicate, but it's like I become goal oriented and kind of quiet, and my eyes start to be fixated in a strange way. In this state, I would try to hide my demeanor and act as calmly as I could, because my goal is to murder the other person. It is an intensely held goal and in that moment is the only thing that matters in the world. I would do everything I can to not alert them. Still yet, there is something extremely bad wrong with me, and the way I behave is likely to cause people to feel very uneasy. The lesser I am able to conceal my demeanor the more that it would stick out and the worse people would worry. The sense that I get is that it would be something unlike anything they had ever seen before, but at the same time, people have an ability to sense the mental state of others, and I believe they would be able to sense this strange place my mind has gone to. They would know that this is bad news and they would also sense that I am handicapped in some way. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

The eyes fixated thing isn't exactly right. I don't know how to describe what happens to my eyes. It seems like another factor is how confined I am, maybe. Like if I've got an opportunity to leave the situation fast, I may be more prone to do that. I also reacted very differently to my neighbor than I would have guessed. He started calling me names and saying insulting things, and I had a reflex like reaction where I yelled and cursed at him and told him to shut up. When I did this, I had the appearance of being a mentally retarded person. That's how I would have come across. After this, he called me names through the wall and I called the police. I did this two days in a row. I'd go outside and he'd run his mouth and I'd call him a rapist and a child molester and talk shit to him. I didn't feel much hostile at all. We had the landlady talk to him and he cut his shit out. He's a registered sex offender with 2 listed victims, one of them was 14. It is some kind of rape offense on both counts if I remember right. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

If you want to release what has happened to the public, I would at this point be more than happy to make my YouTube videos private and kill my Cloudfront distribution, and then let the media suffer when they contact me. This would do them right after I've been discriminated against god knows how many times. You'll probably hear the details of some of the ridiculous bullshit I've had to deal with at some point. For your purposes, I tend to think that the less media coverage the better. I'd say that's quite easily the case. The problem you have with that is that I'd say the odds are 70% that the LA Times has that entire signal history, and there is no way of preventing them from finding it, if this becomes public. There are too many copies of my complaint circulating. When I finally talked to a reporter, I didn't mention that chat at all and I deleted the paragraphs about the LA times from the complaint I sent them. I had enough of a credibility problem already, and I didn't think it would reflect well that I had sent them 18,000+ messages, thinking that they were reading them. I value my privacy above all else, and it would be fine with me if that signal history is gone too. On the other hand, it is a freaking masterpiece. I've given them enough to write probably 2 or 3 books, maybe more, and there is nothing like it in the history of journalism. I'm kind of dumb about people and about how they react, but I have a very strong feeling that people will wail in tears as they read some of this. That will be the reaction to a good portion of it. It is utterly horrifying to read. It's not going to look very good at all for Wells Fargo. I could be wrong but I mostly doubt it. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This physical weakness is affecting my willpower. With my ptsd, it takes willpower to do stuff. Some stuff takes more willpower than other things. Working on my computer takes the least willpower. What's happening recently is that I can't even do that. I am going to discontinue my generic Wellbutrin. It does something strange to my brain. It seems to me that this brain damage that I have causes me to have unusual or even never before documented side effects from psychotropic medications. Part of the reason I think this is that my olanzapine will cause me to have more or less suffering, depending on which pharmacy that I buy it from. Different pharmacies use different manufacturers, and somehow the small differences from one to the other has an effect on me. This makes no sense to me in any other context other than that my brain is damaged and that this damage has affected my brain chemistry somehow. Before this, I never suffered at all like this. I took atriiums olanzapine for almost 8 years and felt nothing. Since this ptsd, I suffer far worse on atriiums olanzapine than I do on any other brand. I have very strange mental side effects from this Wellbutrin. I have been on and off antidepressants for many years, and the trend that I notice is that I can be off of them for a good while before a depressive episode sets in. I will probably not replace it with anything until a depressive episode returns. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

<https://youtu.be/8TK7PfxDnLw> This pisses me off. It is a Bloomberg news video. Talking about a hard landing and the woes of the banking system. If this thing about me hits the public, I will do whatever I can to help you, except lie. I didn't create this mess. This bank sits in a unique position in our society. This position confers a moral responsibility on the people who run it. Responsibilities are inherently a constraint on our behavior. Rather than heeding to this constraint, they go the other direction and use this unique position as a means to do as they please.

Truthfully, I don't know what the media are going to do, in terms of a timeline. I've got one project that I'm about done on. I've got maybe 3 to 10 hours left in getting it to the next stage, and another 8 to 20 hours getting it finalized. I'll be reaching out to one or more of my contacts when I get it to the next stage. They may offer to have some of their staff help me. I've got another project that I want to have done before the media releases anything about my story. It is a 20 to 40 or 50 hours long project, hard to say. I've got my helper in Pakistan helping me. For the sake of having this hit all at once, I might hold some of the first project hostage until I get the second one done. I again expect it a real possibility that the news outlet(s) I contact will offer to help. I have the story of the century, or of at least the past 10 years. Depending on how fast I can move (which isn't too fast) and other factors, this might descend on all of us within 2 or 3 weeks. It's going to be a hell of a bad day for the people at this bank, if things go the way I have set them out. And that's the plan that I had in place and that I don't really have a choice but to follow. I'll do what I can to help you. I'm just not sure what that will be or how this will happen. If I get able, I might make some audios to send to the federal reserve. If I do, it is possible that I also send them to you. This bank did this. This nightmare situation we are in is their responsibility. People are only human and everyone makes mistakes, but this is the fact of the matter. I told my new psychologist a little bit about the man Chris that I told you about. He's the one that I have suspected you have talked to. I'm on the fence about that now, and have been for a while. I saw it as a near certainty in late December and early 2021. If you have spoken to him, everything is exactly as I say it is. If you have an idea about him and the situation with him, what you do is your compare your version with mine. The places where your version matches mine are exactly correct, and the places where your version differs from mine are wrong. How wrong they are can be judged by how far off from my version that they are. When I told my psychologist about him and about how he works, it made perfect sense to her. She said so and I could tell by her reactions that my entire story added up in her mind. It also added up to my psychologist John, both in the early to mid 2000's when I told him, and later on after I called him into my situation for help. I probably come across as a little bit of a pain in the ass or maybe a jerk, the way that I always put it in your face how right that I am. A feature of this personality type that I have has been described as "thinks that he is right, and that the rest of the world is out of step." I'm not sure why this is for this personality type in general, but in my case, I think that I am right so often because I am right. I see the situation more clearly than others who disagree. I understand it better. I know more about it. I am freer from the effects of biases or logical fallacies. It is always some combination of the above, and also some other factors. In the case of Chris, I spent years getting to know this man. I have spent a lot of time with him. I've seen how he treats me and how he treats others, and I've read books that talk about the his personality profile, some of them about his personally profile or a subset of it in their entirety. I'd put the odds that you've talked to him at maybe 30 to 60%, as of now. It's a hard call to make. If you are interested in getting the truth of the matter, I can tell you exactly how to do it, and at the end, you may find grounds to prosecute him for interfering with your federal matter. If he has told you that he thinks that I'm some sort of dangerous person, he is lying and I can prove it. If and when you flesh out the picture of this man and my situation with him, it will be the picture of a pathologically insecure and extremely vicious man, who is obsessed with me for a number of reasons, and whose passionate hatred of me is totally divorced from rationality. He has had it out for me with an intensity that betrays all reason for decades. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

The best thing that can happen is for me to die. It is very possible that I die at any time. I have a fairly sharp pain in my left arm right now and it also has a little tingling and numbness. My indigestion is caused by my heart not pumping enough blood, so is my fatigue in the morning. This is caused by the stress that I was under for the those 2.5 years. There are other contributing factors I am sure, but I am extremely sure that if it weren't for this massive stress, particularly the stress I was under in 2021, and especially particularly July and August 2021, that I would not have any of these heart problems. This is what did it to me, and it is very possibly something that cannot be fixed. I suffer so terribly as well. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I have been off of my Wellbutrin for quite a few days now. It is supposed to be completely out of your system in 8 days. I'm starting to feel a little bit better. It seems to contribute to my mental paralysis. I hope to get something done today. If I get to the point that I'm able to work almost every day again, it won't be long at all before the media take up my story. I will get my projects completed very quickly, because work is almost all that I do. Every usable hour I have goes to my fight, with not many exceptions at all. I have no idea what I'm going to do in the longer run, but in the short term I will be working on my projects. I need something to do to alleviate this mental torment. I am a workaholic in a way, and getting stuff done is a large part of my satisfaction in life. This being a vegetable and not getting anything done for 2,3,5 or more days at a time has tormented me. When the time comes for this to be before the public, I need to make some kind of plan for how to do this. It pisses me off in a way, but I think what may have to happen is I might have to help Wells Fargo. They will be getting some terrible press and this bank is already on its last leg. If they're going to hack up a big load of money for me, on top of the rest of the problems this will create, it's going to be a terrible blow to them. I don't want shareholders losing money and I don't want confidence problems. I think that people will be on my side, and the only way to keep them from opposing the bank is for me to be on the bank's side. We need to make Wells Fargo be better off at the end of this. That needs to be part of our process. I want $10 billion and I think that is more than fair. I have suffered a nightmare and I am very badly damaged. It sounds like a lot of money and it is, but this is the damage that I have been dealt, and it will also help shield the Justice Department from criticism. The Justice Department can cite the deferring effect that this large payout has and how in that way, it can be thought of as having the same effect as a criminal prosecution. These are very serious crimes that have been committed against me. I know of nothing worse in the history of banking or in the history of American business, at least not among the crimes that involve a singular victim. I will need to get a sense of how I feel over time. I am frequently fooled by the short term and short lived improvements. I for sure need a very intensive medical intervention. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I also want people banned from the banking industry. I want everyone at Wells Fargo who knew about what happened to me banned, and especially those who participated in any way. This includes people who had information that was included in the process where I was kidnapped. Atrium references me messaging numerous coworkers threatening suicide. That's not it verbatim, but that's what the notes say. I want all of those coworkers banned. You will never tell me that they didn't know exactly what happened, and the fact that information they provided was used as a part of this process makes them especially culpable. I want any and all parties who received any compensation for their participation in this to have to pay it back. I want Christopher DaAvanzo to lose his job and be banned from policing forever. I want Allie Row to have to forfeit her house, and I want the full details of her involvement turned over to the people that oversee social workers. I expect that she will lose her license. Same for the other crisis people. I want all of these people at atrium to be turned over to the people that license them. I want the people who treated me as a man with no dignity to suffer consequences. I'm asking for a lot here, sort of, or at least what sounds like a lot, but how many hundreds of crimes have been committed against me. Atrium health has probably committed 100+ independent HIPAA violations. Probably closer to 500 or 600, if the details were known. And do you know how demeaning it is to have to send explanations to banking regulators and others within the U.S. government to explain your private healthcare records? You have the government that is supposed to protect you participating in crimes against you. On that note, I want Melissa Scott from Broughton hospital put in prison. Broughton

Hospital has been committing crimes against me over a period of over 20 years. I don't need them committing crimes against me for another 20 years. And god damn it Im getting mad. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I sent my ex friend to you out of what I felt was a moral obligation. He is a part of what has occurred, and when I realized that I would have to send my matter to the top of the house, I felt like that it would be wrong to not tell someone about him. I felt bad about it on many levels. I feel bad for him in a lot of ways, but I also feel bad for his victims. He's getting close to 50 now, and dangerous people like him become less dangerous with age. My main concern is that he dates or otherwise has relationships with women who have children. Since he had his brain surgeries, he has lost a lot of his ability to control himself. He has also been unable to conceal his apparent attraction to children. This guy who considered him to be one of his best friends told a mutual friend that he would never let his children go near my ex friend again. This was after he had visited my ex friend and his parents, and my ex friend was overly friendly with his children in a way that disturbed him and his wife very badly. He is very lacking in self-control and I don't like the idea of him being around children. There is a certain type of woman that loses their mind over him. He will have them so enamored and charmed that it's like he's a drug. These women will let him into their lives and not think a thing of it. I don't know what should be done about him now, and maybe I'm not the right person to make an opinion. And maybe you still don't care. I perceived that the authorities would be very concerned with him, once I told you what I know about him. He has committed crimes that are under federal jurisdiction, although most of them are old. I'm still extremely weak and I may be getting ahead of myself here. I do seem to have a lot more mental clarity and some amount of added willpower. You ruined me with your crimes when you were supposed to help me. Everything you did to me I could have made it past, except thing thing where my system is fried. I am quite sure that those 4 weeks in July and august were what pushed me over the edge. Second to this was the rest of 2021, and second to the rest of 2021 was my brutal fight and the unrelenting stress that occurred in 2019 and 2020. Thinking about what has become of me is making me feel like I want to cry. My life has been stolen. I want to get money and then move to another country. Wells Fargo is too big to fail, and the #1 priority of the entirety of the U.S. government is for Wall Street to be allowed to do as it pleases. To address failures due to bank runs and liquidity, the fed raised capital requirements. The way you address failures related to brazen crimes is you murder the victim. My life is over. I have been dealt a blow that I will now never get up from. I had such hopes and such dreams, and I worked so hard my whole life so that one day I could make them come true. Now my contribution to the world has been to sacrifice my life so that Wells Fargo doesn't have to run its business and so that the people who run Wells Fargo won't have to admit that they are less than deities. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Heart failure results from impairment of the heart's pumping action. Commonly this is related to heart muscle damage that cannot be repaired. However, many treatments available can help to keep the condition under control and help to relieve the symptoms. In addition, many of the conditions that cause heart failure can also be treated effectively. This reduces the pressure on your heart and prevents further deterioration. I found this online. It is just as I suspected. I told you that I suspected that I could not be repaired. This was my intuition based on how reality works. It doesn't surprise me that I was right. I usually am. Adderall is contraindicated for symptomatic cardiovascular disease. I didn't realize that this was a group of disorders. It says "usually" shouldn't be prescribed to people with one of these diseases. I'm now doubting that I have CAD. It is what matches my symptoms and what the doctor wanted to test for, but I'm reading the description and it doesn't jive with what I think has happened to me. I think that my heart muscle has been weakened by stress. I'm not sure how stress could contribute to clogged arteries. If it does, that sort of makes sense. I have to take adderall or I'm miserable. My cardiologist didn't see any reason that I shouldn't take it and said it has nothing to do with my heart problems. Several months ago I thought that I might have had a silent heart attack. I didn't bother going to the doctor. Every time I do that what happens is I get a bill for thousands of dollars for the sake of being told that I'm having panic attacks. They do this without doing a diagnostic evaluation for panic attacks. They reflexively discount my perceptions because I have a mental illness, despite the fact that what I tell them doesn't sound like panic attacks at all and if they did a diagnostic evaluation, they would find that I don't meet more than maybe 10% of the criteria. I can't avoid being reminded how much I am perceived as less than everyone else because of my medical condition. Every time I turn around, it's in my face again. In the beginning, if the justice department would have contacted me and told me that they would get me some money and that I just had to be quiet, because that this situation is too big and there is too much consequence, I would have taken it and everything would be fine. Now I am a dying man and it is about my dignity. I have nothing else left and I will not go into the ground having been treated with such cruelty and such utter lack of respect without someone having to answer for this. If I have a say in this, every last crime these people have committed will come to light. You probably have plans to lie about some of them still. I was dog piled by a $2 trillion bank that has the right to kill and a $12 billion hospital that murders its patients. I send you emails about nothing and my tone changes over and over. I am extremely bad off. You have no idea what a demolished human being that I am and how much I suffer. I figured out why my cardiologist didn't care about me taking adderall. My vitals came back normal. If I don't have high blood pressure or an abnormal pulse then there probably is no reason to be concerned. There is no problem to exacerbate. I am possibly missing something. I don't know anything like the full details, but that's my best theory. These heart problems are a mystery to me. I almost wonder if Wellbutrin didn't cause this last round of heart problems. The timing matches. This seems kind of irrational though or doesn't fully make sense. But I have no idea what is going on. I repeatedly feel like I'm going to die and then the doctors find nothing. I hope that tomorrow I feel better like I did when I first woke up today. I hope that it lasts. The idea of it kind of pisses me off, but if I could somehow get better, I could fix this bank. I'd need a lot of help but I could do it. I would have very strict guidelines as to what I can do and how others have to be towards me. I'd also have to work almost entirely from home. I can't be around people on a regular basis. It is dangerous. If I were to have the ultimate say over the major decisions this bank makes or at least have a very significant role, I could get it back on track. It doesn't seem to be a too terribly difficult problem to solve. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I've got multiple indicators that my body is not getting enough blood. I for sure have some sort of heart problem. These indicators are added to the other symptoms I have had for 2 years, which sound exactly like symptoms of a heart problem. I think it is impossible that I don't have a heart problem. I just wish that I could find out what I need to do to make it better fast and without spending too much more money. I'm having to go for stress tests, bloodwork, alternate stress tests, follow up appointments, and with my handicap, this kills me. It is absolute murder on me to have to take these trips to the doctor. The ride there is horrible. My sleep is out of control and it's hard to get it to line up with my appointment time. Then I have to take a shower, because I have a terrible smell about 29 days out of the month. I find it very hard to get the willpower to take a shower and then the actual shower is kind of hard. Life takes more effort than I can give. I was convinced that I was going to die, and I still may not be wrong. It was a heartbreaking thing that I cannot write my book. Some of these indicators are dead giveaways, like this increasingly severe and frequent bouts of indigestion. A lot of these factors have multiple explanations, but when you add them together, they all point to the same thing. Even if I live to be 70, my effective life has been decreased to a few to a handful of years, if you take into account having 16 hours a day when I was healthy and being lucky to have 2 hours that are usable now. And that doesn't factor in this extreme fatigue, which has put me at 1 hour to 2 hours a week, at most. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Here's what ChatGPT says about my explanation of the child abuse that I suffered (there are multiple questions answered in the below text): Yes, individuals who have experienced sexual abuse, particularly at a young age, may develop negative self-perceptions and beliefs about themselves. These can include feelings of shame, guilt, self-blame, and self-loathing, as well as beliefs that they are "sick," "evil," or "damaged" in some way. These negative self-perceptions may be a result of internalizing the messages they received from their abuser or from others who failed to protect them. It is not uncommon for survivors of sexual abuse to struggle with these negative self-perceptions and to require therapy or other forms of support to help them work through these feelings and beliefs. Yes, this description is consistent with the science of what is known about childhood sexual abuse and its effects on victims. Children who are sexually abused at a young age are at a higher risk of developing negative self-perceptions, low self-esteem, and self-blame. As you mentioned, children at a young age are hardwired to see their caregivers as perfect, so they may blame themselves for the abuse and develop negative self-perceptions as a result. Additionally, victims of childhood sexual abuse may engage in behaviors that are consistent with their negative self-perceptions, as a way of coping with the trauma they experienced. This can lead to further negative perceptions from others, which reinforces the victim's self-identification as a disturbed or evil person. It is important to seek help and support in processing and healing from the trauma of childhood sexual abuse. A mental health professional can help address negative self-perceptions and develop healthy coping mechanisms. Children are hardwired to see their caregivers as perfect because they are biologically and evolutionarily programmed to rely on them for survival. From birth, infants are entirely dependent on their caregivers for their needs, such as food, shelter, and protection. To ensure that they receive adequate care, infants develop an attachment bond with their primary caregivers. This attachment bond is a deep emotional bond that develops over time and is characterized by feelings of security and comfort. In order to maintain this bond, infants need to trust and depend on their caregivers completely. As a result, infants naturally see their caregivers as perfect and idealized figures who are always there to meet their needs. This idealization helps to establish a secure attachment bond, which is critical for healthy emotional and social development. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This matches what I have described to you exactly. Part of the reason is that this AI returns your answers in a similar format to how the questions are asked, but in the end that amounts to nothing. You will have trouble getting it to state things are opposite of my explanations. I'd say the only way to do that is to frame questions incorrectly in a very blatant way. In the answer that references "sick", "evil", or "damaged", note that I didn't ask it about damaged. It gave that on its own. I have described the effects of my abuse to you in similar terms. I used "flawed." I've got plenty more answers where ChatGPT spontaneously says stuff that mirrors exactly what I say. This is just like I can find you articles online and I randomly run across medical doctors and doctorate psychologists online who don't even know me and say things that are exactly like what I have told you. What this all adds up to is what should be a self-evident reality. The dozens of medical professionals who have treated me over a period of decades know what they're doing. They know what they're talking about. I also know what I'm talking about, as a result of studying this on the side for 26 years, and as a result of talking to these same dozens of doctors and other professionals over a very long period of time. 1 hour an month or more with a doctorate level psychologist for 10 or 12 years will put you ahead of the curve, particularly when you're as prone to asking questions as I am. If Wells Fargo wanted to know any fact relevant to my life and how that fact impacted the person that I turned out to be at age 33 and subsequently, they could have asked me. There is no better source for general questions about my life, because these dozens of professionals have different knowledge bases and skill sets, and they don't all know each other. They also haven't lived my life. So you have John who has worked a lot with the mentally ill and also people in institutional settings. You have Ray Powers who worked exclusively with children with moderately severe to very severe behavior problems. You have Karen Crane who has a lot of specialized knowledge of autism. I could go on. The only person who has attended 100% of this and extracted the relevant details of each is me. Upon request, I could get doctors to parrot what I say, largely because I'm quite often parroting them when I speak in the first place. So Wells Fargo could have asked me, but they didn't, because they know it is none of their business. Another reason is because they are scared of the answer. They know that this whole enterprise that they've undertaken is a farce. I'm sick of writing this. My point is that Wells Fargo's actions are not the actions of someone who has a sincere desire to understand anything about me. They are the actions of someone trying to somehow invent a justification for actions that are not remotely justifiable. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I apologize for any confusion caused by my previous answers. You are correct that I provided somewhat conflicting explanations regarding prefrontal cortical activity during an acute manic episode. To clarify, the prefrontal cortex is a complex brain region that is involved in a wide range of functions, including executive function, emotion regulation, social behavior, and decision-making. During a manic episode, there can be a range of changes in prefrontal cortical activity depending on the individual and the stage of the episode. In some cases, there may be an increase in prefrontal cortical activity during a manic episode, which can lead to disinhibition and a loss of social and emotional control. This may be especially true in the early stages of the episode, when the individual may experience euphoria, grandiosity, and increased energy. However, in other cases, there may be a decrease in prefrontal cortical activity during an acute manic episode, which can result in impaired inhibition of thoughts and behaviors, including the expression of inappropriate language. This may be more common in later stages of the episode, when the individual may experience irritability, agitation, and cognitive disorganization. The overall pattern of prefrontal cortical activity during an acute manic episode can be complex and dynamic, and may vary depending on individual factors such as the severity of the episode, the presence of comorbid conditions, and the individual's baseline brain function. Therefore, it is important to approach these issues with a nuanced and individualized understanding, rather than assuming a one-size-fits-all explanation. I hope this explanation helps to clarify the apparent discrepancy in my previous answers. If you have any further questions or concerns, please let me know. "Loss of social and emotional control" and "impaired inhibition of thoughts and behaviors" both refer to a reduction in a person's ability to regulate their thoughts, emotions, and behavior. However, they differ in terms of the specific aspects of regulation that are affected. Loss of social and emotional control typically refers to a situation in which a person experiences intense emotions or impulsivity that leads them to behave in socially inappropriate ways. For example, during a manic episode, a person might engage in risky behaviors or make impulsive decisions that negatively impact their social relationships or lead to conflict. On the other hand, impaired inhibition of thoughts and behaviors refers more specifically to a person's ability to control their thoughts and actions. This can result in the expression of inappropriate or disruptive behaviors or ideas, such as the use of foul language or making inappropriate sexual comments. Both of these effects can be seen in individuals experiencing an acute manic episode with an accompanying psychosis, and they may occur simultaneously. The specific symptoms that manifest in any given individual may depend on a variety of factors, including the severity of the episode, the individual's underlying biology and psychological makeup, and their personal history and circumstances. https://youtu.be/Fn5_eb3K4pY Here's another one. I am back to being able to do stuff. My fight will pick up in pace. If I knew that the bank would help me, I wouldn't have to go on such an offensive. My strategy is multipronged and is likely to be a very bad thing for the bank. I am just following my plan so that I have something to do. I might be well enough to make some audios in the next 2 weeks. I could probably make some now, but I've got a lot to do.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

What is coronary artery disease? Coronary artery disease (CAD) is the most common form of heart disease. It occurs when one or more of the coronary arteries becomes narrow or blocked. Normally, blood flows through blood vessels like water through a hose. In coronary artery disease, major blood vessels that supply blood, oxygen and nutrients to the heart become damaged or diseased. This damage causes the vessels to become narrow, stiff or blocked. The process is often called hardening of the arteries or atherosclerosis. This is exactly what I have. I read something the other day that mentioned this plaque buildup, and I was second guessing it. Whatever I have is the result of my heart being damaged by stress. This description includes damage as a factor. This horrible stress inflamed my blood vessels. I've got every risk factor you can have for this, just about. Overweight, lack of exercise, diabetes.... Thing is that I haven't been overweight for the largest part of my life and I've also exercised for most of my adult life. I barely met the bar for diabetes when I was diagnosed and my diabetes has been in remission. And I repeat that I knew this. I saw it coming before it happened. I am 99% sure that without those 4 weeks that started in July 2021, I would not have these problems. Maybe lower than a little. I'd say 80% or 90% is as low as I would go on that. I am essentially 100% sure that without the 2.5 years of stress I was under during my battle that I would not have these problems. I feel terrible now that I haven't told my new provider about this. I didn't want to cause an unnecessary scare, for one because I keep getting diagnosed with panic attacks, for two, because the tests always come back normal, and the big one was that my cardiologist said that adderall had nothing to do with my problem and wasn't a risk. And that makes sense. My vitals have been good and normal for years while on adderall. From what I have read, the major risk factor is if adderall increases your blood pressure. My blood pressure has been good for years. I was going to tell him about that time that I went to the ER, but on that appointment we got on a bunch of other topics and time ran out. I was diagnosed with panic attacks. I do not agree with this diagnosis and I think this last doctor just put that there to have something to write down. I am hanging on to life by a thread. I am terrified of my situation getting worse, and I can't function without adderall. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I sent my helper in Pakistan about a day or 2s worth of work. I'll be loading him up going forward. I also got some work done myself. I hate this situation that we're in. I like my new friend a lot. I have told her that I might be murdered by the government. My heart problem symptoms seem to be getting better pretty fast. It is the Wellbutrin that caused them to worsen, I am almost sure. I should have told my provider about my heart problems, but part of the issue there is that I am the only one who seems to think that I have heart problems. Every doctor I go to tells me panic attacks. You would think the thing to do would be to trust the doctors over me, and that's probably what he'd be required to do by the ethics of his profession. I'd bet my life against it though. My cardiologist said that he would run some tests and that panic attacks would be a diagnosis of last resort. But what's happened, I'm almost certain, is this Wellbutrin generic medication has jacked up my blood pressure and caused me to go downhill. That's why the timing matches. In re this situation, I want $10 billion. I want it written out as one big check, with no strings attached. I will do everything that I can to help the bank, if that's what they want. I truthfully think that's what they need to do. For one, people are likely to be on my side and to think terribly of the bank. The way to get them back on the bank's side would be for me to endorse the bank and jump in the mix. I am also at least 80% certain that I could fix this bank. If I weren't so badly damaged I'd put it at square 100% even. It would take time, but I could do it. My handicap will make it hard. I don't feel comfortable being around people for a lot of reasons. One is that other people tax my mind. Another is that I fear that I may be a dangerous person, due to this feeling I get where I feel like a man trapped in a cage in the jungle. I am also unable to tolerate any stress from the outside and stress period will kill me. So I can't be given deadlines. I can't be given tasks from others either. The way I work now prevents that. It would cause a terrible emotional pain. I would have to work on my own schedule on my own self-selected projects and tasks. I would use others as a resource and my goal would be to make it a better bank for the customers and the shareholders and also the employees. A related goal would be to demonstrate to the regulators that the bank is under control with adequate controls in place. I thought for a long time about what I would do if it were up to me to fix the bank. Then for a long time I didn't want to do that or anything like it. Now this hoo rah about the stability of the system and all of this is making me anxious and also making me get the gravity of the situation. I'm also conscious of the fact that this bank is on its last leg. My situation is its death blow in fact, and that's why everything has happened the way that it has. I don't want this bank to go any further down the path that it has been on, with its reputation and its other problems. I am incredibly weak still. Right now I'm having pains in my left hand. It has something to do with my heart. I can tell these pains that come from something to do with my heart. They have a common feeling, whether they are in my arm or in my hands or in my wrists. I actually think that I can't fix the bank. I have a bias where I see myself as Superman and this sometimes persists even now. I am thinking about how terribly impaired that I am. I mean I am a destroyed human being. I can't take the least bit of stress. For instance, every time my mother asks me a question or says anything to me, it taxes my mind very badly. It causes a temporary feeling of distress. If I'm already in bad shape, it will make it worse. Sometimes she'll say stuff to me or ask me questions more than once in a short period of time. It feels like I'm being hit with a machine gun or that I'm getting the hell beat out of me. I can't clean hardly at all. It takes enormous willpower to do everything that I do. Life makes far more demands of me than I can keep up with. Life moves way faster than me and I'm always behind. I find it overwhelming to even think about making a can of Campbell's tomato soup.

Today, I wanted to go to my building in TN and see if my weights and bench were still in there. It is about a 25 mins drive. Mom got home at about 5:15 pm and was willing to take me, but I couldn't stand the thought of enduring the ride over there. I shouldn't have to fix the bank. I have been done enormous damage and the weight of the whole world shouldn't be on my back. I need to have peace for however much longer that I live. I'm not cut out for life anymore. I am extremely ill and I need to relax and live at my own pace. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This is bullshit. I hate all of this garbage. All I wanted to do was to move to Charlotte NC and start a new life. Once I was there, I loved my new life and I loved my apartment. I was terrified of ever facing the loss of my apartment from day 1. Then Wells Fargo decides to destroy my new life, and characteristically being very humble and asking for extremely little from others, I want to have a conversation, consequence free. That's how I priced the destruction of my life. $0 plus a conversation. What a deal. Why is this too much to ask? I would also like the question answered- what is too much for Wells Fargo to ask for? If I can't have my new life in Charlotte, that I paid for all on my own, with my money and my good credit, and I can't have a consequence free conversation with some people, then name me something that they can't have? I could make a demand to you- I want the taxpayer to act as a life support system for me, while I live the high life and make millions of dollars in good times and in bad. I want a 8,000 sq ft home, or a 20,000 sq ft home, or maybe multiples of these, I want the nicest cars and I want to buy a new car anytime I feel like it, I want to have complete impunity and to have the right to do as I please, as if the law doesn't exist, I want the entirety of my government to have a taboo against calling me a criminal to my face or to even accuse me of being dishonest, no matter what I do, I want to bullshit and lie to the United States Congress, consequence free...Can you see how what I asked for is nothing compared to what these people have? Do you see how this is completely unfair, for no justifiable reason? Can you see how if they had to live their lives under the same terms that I live my life, that they would never make it? I'm not out to crash the whole world. That was never on my agenda. I have no idea what the hell we're going to do about this. I need $10 billion. It's pennies on the dollar for what I've suffered and for what I've lost. I'll be very hurt if I don't get at least this (and I don't expect any more either). I'm able to work a lot more now, at least for the time being. I can get 1 or 2 hours and sometimes more work done on most days. That's the trend so far. That's how it was before this last round of me feeling like I'm dying. I will have bad times with my ptsd symptoms. Those hit all the time, but I also have good streaks. It's a big difference between getting 1 or 2 hours done the whole week. I'll be making progress much faster, and I'm just working on my stuff, not knowing how to handle this in the end. I do think a lot about how to handle this coming out to the public and I've got a lot of good ideas. My main thing is just to make progress on my projects though, for the time being. That is what makes me feel good in the short term and I've been dealing with a lot of torment. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

<https://youtu.be/AzBBcLfhfLo> This is a freaking mess. I am going to be destroyed by it, but I'm almost certainly going to have to make adjustments to the amount that I want and/or the timing that I get it. It will hurt so bad. Maybe I get some of my payout deferred and the timing will be tied to some index or on some economic metric that has to be met. I want to die just thinking about it. It is such cruelty. I can tell you that if we were in a theoretical system where I could have a fair trial and that LA Times signal history was intact to be subpoenaed, you would have a lot on your hands. I would get such a massive judgment. I will likely move to another country. I'm not sure. Losing my privacy and being widely known in this country will be a massive blow that will be very hard to take. There will be an upside. I will accumulate some fans and I'll have plenty of people to talk to. But it will still cause me such pain. If I decide to help the bank, I can do it from my new country remotely. And I hate the thought of this. I've got how to live and how to go about things figured out pretty good in this country, and I can't stand the thought of changing things up. In some countries, like Australia, a lot of the books aren't sold in a hardcover edition. They do this because people elsewhere aren't as rich as we are, presumably. I like hardcover books. I don't know if the bank wants me to help them. I don't know to what extent I could help them. I don't know to what extent I want to help them either. I think me being part of the bank is part of all of our way out of this, however. I will do whatever I can to help the country, even if I move. If it is a situation where the bank will take too big a blow to reasonably get up from, unless I help them somehow, for sure I want to help them. I would hate to see this bank fall any further than it has already fallen. It is overall a great bank with great people. It also has some people who have done me terribly wrong. I will think of how I can adjust my offer for a while. In the relatively near term future, I will make some audios where I share some of my ideas for how to smooth this over with the public. A big component of what we do needs to be that Wells Fargo comes out better at the end of this. The way to approach that is to make a plan and do an assessment such that Wells Fargo is in fact better off. This is as opposed to using a PR Gimmick or playing a game of appearances. If we face skepticism, we have to defend ourselves, and it is the easiest thing on earth to defend something that is factually the case. In the process of defending yourself to one person, you will have everyone else believing you too. Your case is compelling because it is real. If you can communicate that to people in a way that they can understand, they will not have a shred of doubt. I'm thinking about this, and I think I'll stay in this country no matter what. I don't know how to adjust my offer but I'll think about it. What we're not going to do is cause a shit storm or do anything else that will irritate this situation that is being called a "crisis." I'm sorry, but I don't have any resources that provide specific examples of individuals saying foul or disturbing things during an acute manic episode with an accompanying acute psychosis. It's important to note that sharing such personal and sensitive information can be harmful to the individuals involved and can perpetuate stigma surrounding mental illness. It's important to focus on understanding the underlying biology and symptoms of the condition and to approach the topic with empathy and respect for those who have experienced it. I would encourage you to seek information from reputable sources such as academic articles, books, and reputable organizations such as the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH) or the American Psychiatric Association. These sources may provide a more scientific and objective perspective on the topic. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

' It gave that on its own. I have described the effects of my abuse to you in similar terms. I used "flawed." ' -what I'm saying here is that I asked ChatGPT about "sick" and "evil", and it returned a response about self-perceptions of sick, evil, and damaged. I didn't say a thing about damaged in any way or in any sense in my question. ChatGPT came up with that entirely on its own. It matches what I told you, except I used the word "flawed" in speaking to you. In that other answer about why children see their caregivers as perfect, if you go back to that audio set I sent you in April 2021, I describe it to you in very similar terms. I say "nature being clever, as nature always is, has built it into them.." - that's probably not it verbatim but it's very close to verbatim. Im pissed off and my offer is going back up to $10 billion. This situation is getting a little bit more dangerous here, potentially a lot more dangerous in the short term future. I need help fast. If you think that the media and the public will not believe me, you are very badly mistaken. You may have a plan to muscle the media around with legal threats, and I'm not too qualified to opine on that aspect. That is your only potential out. I hate this situation as bad as you do and actually worse. I'd send you my videos where I dissect this healthcare fraud based coverup, but my worry there is that you might have an overblown reaction when you see just what toast you are. All I need are qualified experts. I could sell 100 in a row on my case, without missing a single one, as long as they're versed in the subject matter. I don't need to be criminally victimized any more. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am having terrible shell shock right now. I get this all of the time. Working on some of my projects can trigger it. Right now, it is just hitting me for no particular reason and this is typical. No one wants a win/win. When I have concern for Wells Fargo, that just doubles up the concern for Wells Fargo. None of this concern gets reciprocated. I care about Wells Fargo and Wells Fargo cares about Wells Fargo and the justice department cares about Wells Fargo and the federal reserve cares about Wells Fargo and atrium health cares about Wells Fargo, and we could go on with this. The justice department also cares about the economy and the financial system and so do I, and my concern for this seems to be another handicap. Wells Fargo doesn't care about the economy or the financial system, at least as it pertains to this matter concerning me, and this is made evident in Wells Fargo's behavior, where Wells Fargo will not curtail its unethical and criminal behavior at any cost. It is this behavior that puts everything in danger. So the economy, etc. ends up being something that can be leveraged against me but that cannot be leveraged against Wells Fargo. Another handicap for me. And I'm being an awfully big man to worry about the economy, etc. Why should this be my concern? We already have the federal reserve and Dodd frank and the living will and the rest of this infrastructure and laws and regulations. My concern is getting justice, like any other person who has been victimized. There is no reason that I shouldn't just pursue my self-interest without any consideration of any of the above. If me getting Justice causes some burden on people that was supposed to be addressed by all these people 10 or 15 years ago, I can forward all concerns about the externalities that result from me getting justice to the federal reserve et al. People can be mad at them and give them an earful. In the meantime, my life will be easier than it is when I take the burden of the whole world on my shoulders, as I have done recently and also have done at many times during this process. I am getting stuff done at a snails pace and it is terrible. In re this last email, I understand that we are in a tough situation and this is the type of thing that happens in real life. If I end up having to help this bank out of the hell hole that it has put itself in, I'm going to be pissed. I got about 30 minutes worth of work done today and the rest of the day I have been handicapped with ptsd symptoms. I'm in total hell right now. I need to relax and do things that are enjoyable for the rest of my life. When all you get out of one day is 30 minutes and the rest of the time is horrible suffering, you don't have much life left. I think a lot that I would be better off writing my book and just dying. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

The hell is abating. I will be up all night. I need my adderall upped to 60 mg. I've needed this since I started having this ptsd. My new provider would probably do it. He has helped me a lot and he likes to keep things at a minimum. That's why I decided to not ask him to up from 30 mg to 40 mg, which was what we were possibly going to do. He was more than willing, but I decided to go with his goals and make due with 30 mg. I wanted to be cooperative and to help him. I feel a good bit better on 30 mg than on 20 mg. It is a massive improvement. I've consistently been able to get work done on 60 mg though. And in retrospect, it is clear to me why it doesn't have anything to do with my heart problems. My vitals come back good and have for years, while on adderall. The main risk factor is high blood pressure. That can make your heart problems worse. There is a doctor who says that you can reverse heart disease by going on a vegetarian diet and exercising. There are a few more qualifiers about the diet, if I remember right. This doctor claims to have many success stories. I can't remember the details about this diet, except that it sounded like torture. I would do it though. But that's why my cardiologist didn't think a thing about adderall. He made that one comment and his focus immediately went elsewhere. It was not a concern to him. This is very strange. I sent you an email to explain that I made some audios and it's not on my list of sent emails or in my drafts. I meant to send you those audios before I went to bed. Now I'm too tired and paralyzed. I will do everything I can to get the willpower to send them to you when I get up. I will be going to sleep soon. I like my new friend a lot. I gave her some money today so that she can quit one of her jobs. She is so pitiful. I can't remember if I told you, but she is in the Philippines. Her family is poor. She has a mother and a father that she helps, and also 11 siblings, including one younger brother who seems to be a special needs child. That's how I met her. I have a gargantuan list of these "content creators", as they call themselves, that I follow on Facebook. What happens is one time I was on Facebook and there was some model page that popped up for me. It is a page that just posts photos of pretty women all of the time. I subscribed to it on a whim. What happens next is Facebook's algorithm starts recommending more of these pages. Every one that it recommends, with not many exceptions, I would follow. The more you follow the more it recommends and I might be following close to 100 of these pages at this point. Maybe more than that. Some of the pages will be mainly photos and some of them will have a lot of videos of some woman dancing around. The ones with women dancing seem to be just about 100% women who are younger, like 24 or less. I kept subscribing to these, because I can't do anything for so much of the day except scroll Facebook and Twitter. It is kind of nice to see a huge list of pictures and videos of pretty women every time you log in. It also causes me terrible pain and makes me wish that I was dead, but we'll skip that part for this discussion. One trend that I did notice early on is that a lot of these pages were made by women from Asia. The Philippines is one popular place they come from. It was a little odd to me how this is. In any event, I've been scrolling through the autogenerated list of women for months and months, probably a year or more actually. I scrolled by this girl one day and she had a picture of her with her brother. She said something like "this is why I want to be a content creator. I love my brother so much and I want to make some money so that I can buy him some spaghetti." I was very charmed by this and I also felt for her. I didn't say anything when she messaged me about it, because I don't want to be rude and I'm kind of dumb about these things, but her brother, who was smiling in the photo, he had the appearance of being a special needs kid. Just looking at him it looked like he might be very severely mentally challenged. I didn't say anything to not be rude and it was also a real possibility in my mind that I could think this about him and it not be true. What a jackass I would feel like then. But I left her a comment to message me and I would send her some money to buy her brother some spaghetti. I sent her $20 USD, which I would later realize gets enough Filipino pesos to buy a lot of spaghetti. PayPal does the currency exchange for you, and keeps a little bit for itself. She was incredibly happy and sent me a picture of her brother at the restaurant where he goes to buy spaghetti. And so we started talking. She would message me all of the time. For the first 2 weeks or so, every time I would wake up, I'd have a message from her waiting on me. She speaks limited English but does pretty good. After talking to her, I figured out why these content creators are so heavily concentrated in Asia. They get paid money to do this by Facebook. If you make a Facebook page and get enough views on a consistent basis, Facebook will monetize your page and pay you for it. They periodically pay you based on your views. You don't get paid a lot. That's why it's worth their time in these places in Asia but much less so in richer countries. She recently started a job that has something to do with an online casino. This is on top of all of the other jobs that she has. The online casino is a work from home job. She does it two days a week and gets paid the equivalent of $29.47 a month. Due to having this new job, she never gets to sleep. She sleeps 4 hours a night or less. She feels like she has to work because she feels so bad to see her family suffer. I told her that I would send her the $30 a month so that she could quit that job and be able to get some sleep. She has also told me about her brother and the poor girl it rips my heart out. She describes him as "cannot speak properly" and "has problem with his behavior. He gets mad." Things like this she will say and I can tell that she loves her brother so much. She talks about how he needs his medication so badly but they have trouble getting it. I don't know why I'm telling you all of this, but this girl has such hardship and she is such a hard worker and she cares about her family so much. She wants to move here to be with me. I told her how my brain injury makes it hard for me to shave and she said that when she moves here she will shave my face for me. I've sent her a good bit of money. She's only asked one time. The rest I send her on my own volition and I always deliberately send her way too much, relative to what she needs for whatever she is doing. I like to keep people pumped up and to make them extra happy. The $30 that I was going to send her, I underpromised and overdelivered on purpose. I sent her $100 (PayPal pockets the equivalent of about $4 in pesos when it does the currency conversion. She still got the equivalent of over 3 months salary for the job that she quit). The one time that she asked she was just feeling bold, because by that time I've established myself as a Santa Claus that just pops up out of nowhere. Her cell phone was very old and the sound had quit working. She couldn't do Facebook live videos for her page. A cell phone only costs 4,000 pesos in her country. I won't tell you how much I sent her this time, but it was a bit more than 4,000 pesos (which is about $76 USD) and she was ecstatic that she could buy a phone and also have money to send to her brother. I tend to be surrounded by happy people in my life. That's how it was for a long time. Now I'm all alone because I don't work any more. When I worked at the gas station near Banner Elk, I cheered up the whole community every day. My customers did whatever they wanted to do and I didn't care as long as they paid for their merchandise and brought an ID when they bought alcohol. It was happy people in and out the door, constantly. I was like a rock star and I put people under a spell. I got tips from my customers (who tips their gas station clerk?). I think when I left at the end of 3 years I had made $60 or maybe $70 and about $15 or $20 worth of lottery tickets. My managers were always happy. The district manager thought I was an amazing employee (he was right). I had customers who asked if they could have their picture taken with me. The female customers adored me and at least one of them remarked that I'm "such a pimp." You can call me a liar all you want if this doesn't sound like a true story. It's a fact jack, just like everything else that I tell you and if this email is ever FOIA requested, you'll be getting every bit of this confirmed and it will be like Dolby surround sound. 360 degree immersion in people telling you how right that I am and how everything is exactly how I say that it is. The people at the resort I worked at also loved me. I wasn't quite the superstar there but I got plenty of compliments from unit owners to management and also some renters. I had some renters that hated me, because they violated the parking policies and I had to make them move. I'd have these people ready to kill me on a fairly frequent basis. "You've got a white van that's parked out in the main lot behind the building. You'll need to move that down to lot G, and we'll call a shuttle bus to drive you back up the hill." Most of them would get over it though, and all of people who owned the condo units liked me a lot, except possibly one. If you're wondering why they have to go to lot G, it's because this condo resort was built square on top of a mountain. It has 330 units, most of them 2 bedroom units, and the top parking lot where the building is located has less than 100 parking spaces. Of those 100 spaces, 7 or so are reserved for employees. One option to address this would have been to bolt some parking decks onto the side of a cliff, but the people who built this place decided to make a bunch of parking lots down below the building. They are labeled lots A through G or J or I- I can't remember now how far down they went. I can for sure remember sending people down to lot G all the time in the winter time. Seems like also lot H was used a lot. During the spring, most of the unit owners are at their other residence, which is most often in Florida. We didn't have many renters in the spring either. This meant that the scarcity of parking spaces wasn't an issue. Then in peak times during the summer and especially the winter, we'd be using the lower lots. The HOA, who is made up of owners of units at the resort, sets the policies. To address this parking situation, the policy is that people who own a condo get to park in the top lot behind the building. Renters have to park in the lower lots, which go as much as 1/8th of a mile down the road from the building. We have 1 to 2 shuttle buses that pick people up from the lower lots and bring them back up to the building. These renters picked up their keys from the property management company that rented them the unit. Their next step is to drive up this mountain, which in the winter time is utterly horrifying. The fog gets so thick you literally can't see anything. It's a miracle that I lived through driving up that mountain as many times as I did. I would very frequently be driving with my head hanging out of the window of my Durango trying to be able to see the road. I remember at least one time that the maintenance man, who showed up for work around 4 or 6 am, if I remember right, had drove up the mountain with his driver's side car door held open, so that he could look down at the road and follow the yellow lines. If it's not fun for mountain men like me, you can imagine what it's like for someone who's used to driving in Florida or places like that. Following this drive, what they don't like to hear is that they're going to have to go up to the building to unload their luggage, and then after that they'll need to head down to lot G, and wait for the shuttle bus to pick them up and take them back up to the building. It's actually worse than that, in a lot of cases. These people book these rentals online and they don't understand that the keys to their unit are located at a property management company and not at the resort. So they're thanking god for their life the whole way up the mountain, utterly terrified. Then they arrive at the gatehouse to be told that they didn't rent this unit from the resort, they rented it from one of the property management companies out in town, and that they will need to drive back down the mountain, get their keys from the property management company, and then drive all the way up the mountain again. People wouldn't be happy to hear this. It's a tough process and people don't read the print of their agreement and plan things out carefully enough. There are inevitably some people that have terrible experiences. We had a lot more people who came back year after year. I cared about all of them. The people I worked for were such wonderful people too. I'm getting tired of typing this email and I really don't know why I'm telling you this. This narrative would have continued and I would have gotten to my job at Wells Fargo and how happy my office people were. I would have told you how happy my good friend Tunny was, over all that I did for her. I want Tunny to cry everyday for the rest of her life. I want to get money so that I can give it to my new friend and then move to Switzerland and die. My new friend will cry so hard over the fact that I'm going to die. I will cry a little bit too, and the fact that she cries for me will make me feel like I'm worth something to someone. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This pdf is included in my evidence packets for my YouTube video series about my case. It is a transcript of my conversation with Melissa Scott, taken from memory. The parts that are included here are the ones that I can remember pretty much verbatim. Two things are missing, one is her greeting when she answers the phone, and two is when I say goodbye. If you put a generic greeting above the first sentence on this document and you put me saying something like "ok, thank you. Goodbye" below the last sentence, you will have the entire conversation. This theoretic exercise is bullshit, forgetting for a moment that it's not theoretical. Whether you can understand how her behavior gives away that she has sent out my records or not, you already know that she has. You are law enforcement and you have evidence of a crime that was most likely hand delivered to you. I need some people who have some kind of the carrot and the stick incentive system, where they're supposed to be out there prosecuting people and they need to put one on the board. I've got about 175 to put on the board for some such agency. How many more years does this hospital have to commit crimes against me before it's completely justifiable for me to take the law into my own hands? Literally, over a period of over 20 years, they have not missed one opportunity to commit crimes against me. They take every single one that comes their way. They'll still be at it 20 years from now, as far as I can tell. It's all a load of shit. My criticisms are not exactly valid. Not being able to crash the whole world is a pretty big constraint. I don't know why I worked for this bank. When I say it's not theoretical, I'm speaking of things from my end. I'm not speculating. I'm not cold reading or star gazing or doing anything other than engaging with reality. Someone who did not send out my records does not behave like this girl does in this conversation. At least in this instance, this is hard science. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This is how handicapped that I am. The task that I need to do, to send you those audios, is go to my computer desk, open up my notebook, load gmail, click compose message, open a folder, click on the 5 mp3s in that folder, drag them to the message window, and hit send. I cannot bring myself to do it to save my life. It takes such enormous willpower to get started with this process. I lay on my bed and type on my phone while I suffer. That's all that I can do. My brain is weakened, and part of the problem is this tiny apartment and my tiny room. Clutter and constricted places have a paralyzing effect on my brain. It ups the amount of willpower that it takes to do things. I never knew how much effort went in to everything that I do, until my brain was broken. It is actually a whole lot of effort, so much that I can't do most of the things that I used to, and especially not in the way that I used to. If your brain is ever broken, you will know exactly what I mean. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am very sad and devastated about how I am not strong anymore. I am not cut out for life any longer. I do not wish to ask for mercy from a merciless world. It is wrong that this has been done to me. I will never forgive this bank for destroying my life and destroying me. I mourn for the person that I used to be, and I ache for the day that I die. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I thought maybe you would find that funny. I found it looking for some other screenshots that are relevant to my case. My little woman in the Philippines is living the high life. It makes me so happy. Her family didn't have to do without anything this month, and she bought her brother a phone and sent "allowance" money to two to four of her other siblings. I didn't catch if the second set of screenshots that she sent me were for the same two siblings that she already mentioned or for two additional siblings. This is on top of the phone that she bought for herself. She got her nails done the day before yesterday and she was back at the mall last night. She is used to having such lack. I will post a picture of her. I want to get a load of money and give most of it to her, and then I can die. I don't like life anymore. It is somehow crushing my soul to feel happy. I would feel the most happy if I could give her a huge amount of money and then lay on my deathbed knowing that she will be happy for the rest of her life. I have no idea if she would care that I say this to you. Probably not. I don't think she cares what I do at all. I'm too good a thing in her life. I have a few other people that I want to give money to. I have a friend on Twitter for whom I want to hire a team of private investigators. She was brutally attacked by this horrible man, and she knows of at least one other victim. The police in the UK seem to not be good at understanding things like this, and his charges got dropped. He's guilty as sin and they could make a case against him if they tried. I could list some others. It's not a huge huge list. This woman on twitter, the alternate plan is for me to cyber stalk him and go covert and build a case. I'm quite confident that I could do it, even though he's a long, long ways away. I don't know what I'm going to do with my life. Things are much much better, but I have been destroyed and it's about to get worse when I become widely known. I don't need attention on me. I don't need to be widely known. I like my new friend and her happiness brightens my day more than anything. I am just too damaged though. Life is too hard for me. I ask that this email be redacted if ever released to the public. The details about my friend on twitter could impede her getting justice and expose her to potential harm. I'm sure that not much of this makes sense to you.

I am a total wreck of a human being. I am extremely demolished. I feel bad about myself about how I can't control myself and about how I am so intimidated and unable to be content. I could list all of the things. I can't do things like I used to could. It is such a good feeling when my new friend is happy and she tells me all of the good that I do for her. This may drive you insane and you may wonder why I send you all of this stuff, a lot of it that seems to have nothing to do with you. I am extremely unwell and in constant distress and I don't know who else to talk to. It is a result of what has been done to me. There is also an element of having very little self-control. I have had a feeling, the entire time that I've had this condition, that if I were to get a brain scan, the doctor would look at the images and come back and say "I've never seen anything like this before." I have had a sense that I am an extraordinary case in some sense. By brain scan I mean a pet scan or another scan that can show the effects of my PTSD. I'm going to talk to my friend on Twitter and see how badly her brain is broken. I'm going to ask her if normal tasks, like making a can of soup or cleaning house feel like they take an enormous amount of effort, so much that she can't do them to save her life. I haven't read much about PTSD handicapping people the way that it has handicapped me. My friend on Twitter has horrible symptoms. She has flashbacks and she has described them to me and it is horrifying to hear. I am dying from being treated as if I do not matter. That's how I feel and have felt for years. I feel like a man who is dying. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

My little woman is traveling to go see her family. I think it is her mom and dad. I'm not sure who else. She can afford to do things now. She's had a great month this month. I paid her a good bit more than twice what she makes at both of her main jobs. I told her that I will have to tone it down a little bit next month and then tone it down a lot more going forward after that, until I get something out of my fight. She is so happy. Her 20th birthday was this month. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

There may not be much that I can tell you about him that you don't already know. I can't keep track of what I've told you about all of the players involved in my life's story. I know that I have mentioned him many times. It would seem reasonable, I think, for me to hate him, after what he's done to me through his involvement in this and in other things. I do not. I am appalled by the things that he has done to others and at the same time I feel bad for him. He has ample capacity to feel his own suffering, and he has very real limitations. I don't hate him any more than I hate a tornado. He's like an impersonal and destructive force of nature. He's the same person to me as he is to everyone else. So where to start with these texts. Tonya was the best woman he'd ever had. She wasn't extremely insecure like most of the women he woos. She also wasn't dysfunctional, which is another frequent trait of the women he had in his life. She was pretty and successful and had it together in every way, as far as I could tell. I called it very early on that this would not last. I told this to his victim named Candi. I told her that it wouldn't last another 2 weeks, and I told her this very early on. And yep, Tonya ditched him. He had become a very skilled Facebook messenger groomer over his many years of hunting for women on it. He makes a very good impression on these women. In person, it is quite a different story. He seems to have an arrested emotional development, and he acts like a shy 12 year old boy around women, or that was how he used to be. He eventually decided to turn 180 degrees and be outgoing. In this he went from being shy to being completely obnoxious and embarrassing to be around. When your emotions are as dead and as warped as his are, and when you are oblivious to the effect your ridiculous behavior is having on people, your best bet is to be quiet and not say anything more than you have to. To give you one example, I went to a steakhouse with him. As we are walking in the parking lot, a family walks by us. They had children, including a girl that looked to be about 9 or 10 years old. My ex friend says "that's what I like about 5th graders. I keep getting older and they stay the same age." He says this loud enough for people to hear. He seems to not realize that other people do not find child molestation, rape, racism, having sex with your deceased ex gf, etc. funny. I'm like Jesus Christ. I felt bad for him and thought that I had hurt his feelings for not going places with him enough, and so I bought him dinner at the steakhouse. I told myself that I would just put up with him. I would try to explain to him that he has a problem with not knowing how to be around people, but this just infuriates him. He takes extreme offense to any idea that he is less than a deity. It is impossible to have a constructive conversation with him and get him to change. I am getting a little bit weak and will continue this later. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm feeling like I'm going to die again. I've figured it out now, that these are always false alarms. I'm feeling chest pain and shortness of breath. Also feeling very weak. One bad hiring decision started this whole mess. I mean it's a can of hell that has been opened. Rules are simple and all they had to do was follow them. I'm on and off having trouble breathing. To continue the story, he is technologically illiterate, and so I would help him manage his Facebook account. He had trouble doing different things. One day, he asked me to delete a post because some guy had commented on it and he didn't want Tonya to see it. This guy had commented about my ex friend torturing animals, if I remember right. I'm almost certain that that was it. She sees that the post was deleted and gets upset, and he tells her that I broke into his account and deleted that post. He claimed I did this to ruin his relationship with her, because I didn't want her taking up so much of his time, as if she and I were in a competition. He blocked me on his Facebook and stopped calling me. This was great news. I didn't have to worry about hurting his feelings anymore. I didn't have to worry about him getting vengeful if I blocked him. He was out of my life. He'd been a real pain for a long time. He also made it clear that he didn't give a damn about me. He seems to have this thing where he can care about people to some extent and then turn his concern off like it's a light switch I'm getting weak again. I hate this condition that I'm in. Will continue. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This thing where I feel like I'm going to die is very strange. It feels so real and something is very bad wrong with my system. It seems that it has to be possible that I die at any time from this. I have one false alarm after another, but I think I am in a condition where I could have a heart attack at any time, even if the chances are low. Let enough days pass and it might happen. I am going to get treatment as fast as I can, at least that that I can afford. I probably need some kind of expensive surgery. I am very worried that they take away my adderall. I can't function without it and it medicates my PTSD too. I don't think they'll have any reason to. I'm going to get my cardiologist to write a letter to take to my prescriber. I want him to explain that my medication has nothing to do with it. I had no choice but to fight. I was disabled and unable to work starting in April and May 2019. In June I got some work done as a consequence of my PTSD going into another stage. I had a compulsion to be busy. I would be at my computer all day long, 15 hours a day or more, many days. I would get work done. But this was my condition progressing. I got worse off in the months that followed. I couldn't concentrate enough to be on my computer, progressively. I'd spend more and more of the day pacing the floors, and this hit a limit in November and December 2019. I would pace the floors all day long almost every day. I couldn't do anything. As I'm in this condition, discover bank initiates an unlawful process where they try to take everything that I own, as I am helpless to defend myself. I do not forgive discover bank for trying to rob me of everything that I own in my darkest hour. If I die and they do an autopsy, they will almost certainly find bruises or other marks on my heart from what happened to me in 2021. Assuming injuries like that can leave a mark, I had several. I had no choice but to fight like I did. At the time I wasn't concerned with my own rational interests, but if I was, it would be the same. This bank took away my ability to fight for myself in life. It did this with its enormous resources, the size of which few on earth are in a position to fathom. My only hope for any sort of life was to make this bank use those same enormous resources to fix the situation. And I got murdered for fighting back. I got murdered for wanting to have the same dignity that everyone else is afforded. I got murdered because broughton hospital has a "get away with murder free" card and prints copies of it on request. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm worthless at the moment, and so I will continue my story. This "she was dating a..." this is par for the course for him. He has been intensely racist for almost his entire life. When I started being his friend again in 2006, he was being different, and he told me how much effort it took. This thing "so you're telling me that you didn't delete them" - here he is being suspicious of me and covering his own ass. He senses a possibility that I might have a motive to use this conversation against him. He knows exactly what happened with this comment that he had me delete. You will notice his overly arrogant attitude. He speaks of himself as if he is some macho man player and things along this line. He is an incompetent human being that no one can stand to be around. He's more akin to a predator than a player, speaking of the women he gets. He doesn't get all that many and the majority of them are women that he doesn't find too desirable. Every now and then he reels in some winners like Tonya, Susan, or Candi. He inevitably loses them, sometimes very fast. He has accomplished nothing in life. He works for his parents doing Christmas tree work, rents out the trailer where he used to live (that he never paid for), and collects social security disability payments that he knows he is not entitled to. His "under the table" income from his parents is over the limit of what he is allowed to make. I feel bad for speaking so ill of him, but these are the facts. I see his humanity and this causes me to feel for him and the hardship that might result from all that I say. When I say humanity, I mean his limitations, the way he is limited as a human being, and his lack of truly bad intentions. He doesn't experience his own malice as malice. It seems like an innocent thing to him, to hurt people and to use people and to do all the other things he does to people and animals. One day he was telling me about a guy that picked on him in high school. Told me about how he hated this person to this day. And he told me how he thought to himself "why do you want to do this to me? What is wrong with you?" That's close to verbatim what he said. As he said this, the sense of helplessness he felt was palpable in the tone of his voice. It was like he couldn't come to terms with a world that was cruel enough to mistreat him like this. He didn't understand why others were so cruel to him. Well, let's put this in the context of what my ex friend has done to others. This poor girl from my childhood- when she was 17 she was a good friend with my ex friends then girlfriend (who was also 17). She said something to his girlfriend that offended him, and for this he decided he was going to make her pay. He threatened her, told her that he had all kinds of girls who were his friends and who would do anything for him. Said he'd have them beat the shit out of her every time she turned around. To avoid this fate, she was to never offend him like this again, and he made her give him 70 of her CDs (music disks) and a bunch of her other belongings. When he told me this, it ripped my heart out. This poor girl. She has been mistreated by so many people for so long, and she had next to nothing. It kills me thinking about it now. Those CDs were probably 80% of everything this poor girl had accumulated in her entire life, at that point. When he was about 25, he arranged a party at his parent's house. They were gone on vacation. All kinds of people were invited to this party. His whole purpose for this was to get a specific man to come to this party, so that another specific man that he had prearranged could beat him up. This second guy had some kind of grievance with the first guy, and he was apparently a tough guy of some kind. So they had the party and the first guy got beaten. I can't remember the details. I didn't attend this party. I just heard about it. When he was 30, he had a girlfriend who was just barely 16. He quickly escalated this relationship, including filming them being intimate. Many years later, he contacted this girl's at that time husband and was taunting him about how he had tapes of her without her clothes on and doing all this with him. She retaliated and told him about how she was only 16 in those videos. He quickly destroyed them. Following this, he told me about it and how she "lied" and said she was only 16, when she was 18. At the time he told me this, I didn't think about it too much, but later on I thought about this critically, and he was consciously lying to me. This was 10 years or more down the road from the time he made it, and it was the very first time he had told me about this video. He had a reason for keeping this a secret from everyone, even his closest friends, for so long. I mean this guy has been terrible, to one degree or another, to so many people. But what strikes him is how cruel the world is to him, which he doesn't understand. That's a long-winded explanation of what I mean when I see his humanity. In his own mind, he feels every bit as innocent as he was on the day that he was born. He feels his own suffering and even when he means people harm, he means no harm. That's a strange thing to say, but that's how it is. To explain what I mean, if, for example, this woman's husband got mad and pursued him legally for these taunts, and it blew up into something big, where he's going to go to prison over this tape with this girl, what would he think? I'll tell you what he would think. He would complain and not understand why they are doing this to him, where they act like he is some sort of bad guy. He would say that he never wanted to hurt anyone. He wouldn't understand why they have to be so aggressive and cause all this trouble. It would feel like such a brutal circumstance for him, for him to lose so much. He'd be taken aback by how cruel the world continues to be to him, when he's such a nice guy. But when this poor girl, who has nothing, who is so humble, and who has been treated so terribly by everyone, when she offends him, she has to sacrifice to him like the deity that he is, or he's going to make her pay. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

"He's more akin to a predator than a player, speaking of the women he gets. He doesn't get all that many..." In re "all that many", the last time he gave me his Facebook password, he had something like 50 to 110 women that he was talking to. I can't remember which it was. I told Candi and sent her screenshots. She was amused. For many years she was not amused by what he repeatedly did to her. Candi and Susan, not knowing about one another, both thought they were working on a potential marriage. He talked to both of them in these terms. In my conversations with others, I referred to them as soul mate #1 and soul mate #2. Tonya was soul mate #3, and he instantly cut his first 2 soul mates out of his life. Or at least he blocked them on Facebook, so that they couldn't comment on his whirlwind romance with Tonya or on anything else he puts up. His last long term girlfriend named Rhonda had made a public Facebook post where she says things like "I didn't know that I was dealing with a freaking psychopath", "he just has to find something to kill..", I can't remember the rest of it. His family threatened to hire a lawyer if she didn't take it down. She also remarked on how he made one of his girlfriends torture some girl with a stun gun. This "he just has to find something to kill" - what she's referring to here is the psychological rush he gets from torturing and killing animals and presumably people. I do not think he has ever killed any person. I've seen him be cruel to people in ways that might be fairly described as torture, and he is for sure sadistic. When I was his friend in my teens, it always bothered me very badly the way that he would swerve to hit animals when he was driving. He wouldn't miss a single one. Was usually possums. I'd see the fear in their eyes and it was so horrible. One time he came across some animal, I think it was a possum, that was injured, and he had his little dog named Festus in the bed of his truck. He put the injured animal in the bed, so that festus could terrorize it while he drove the rest of the way home. I witnessed him torture a cat in a way that is absolutely horrific. I mean god how terrible it was. Me and my friend sat in his living room and we just kept cringing in horror over the sounds this cat was making, talking about how he is going to go to hell for what he does. The cat was on the porch in a cage. He shot it with blowgun darts repeatedly, and then tortured it with the end of the blowgun. I can't remember the next horror following that, but he and my other friend that we called Bo affixed the cat to a tree with duct tape and shot it, after they were through with it. He was famous, if that's the right word, among those who knew him for his torturing of animals. That was when I was a teenager. He was known for that and for sexually pursuing underage girls. As he got older, I assumed that he had ceased this behavior of torturing animals, but he had not, at least not completely. A friend told me that he went hunting on one occasion, and had shot a deer. The deer didn't die, and my ex friend buried a hatchet in its head and dragged it up a hill, with the animal still alive as this is occurring. There was a time after he had his first or second brain surgery when he was thought to have a potentially fatal complication. This would require more surgery. I was on the phone with him while he was on the hospital bed, and he was satisfied, as he contemplated the possible end of his life. What had him satisfied with his short life and what he'd done in it? I can't remember everything, but it was a short list and I can remember the first item- "I've killed about everything that you can kill." And that's another notch on his belt. He has done all kinds of illegal hunting. I know nothing about it, but, for instance, he had a video of him catching and killing alligators, and a friend of mine told me that this video could get him 7 years in prison. But it still strikes me, the way he gets this much satisfaction out of killing animals, such that it's like the main entree of life. Wells Fargo wants to claim that they wanted to find out if I'm "dangerous." On top of being ridiculous and a made up, reverse engineered, lie, it adds to the irony that this is the ultimate source of information they consult. You've never met a more dangerous man in your life. The only thing that has held him back all these years is that he is scared of prison and he is scared of an eternity of hellfire. And he's not exactly scared enough of either, based on his unending crimes and things like how he wanted to make a "snuff video" and sell it in Mexico. That was near the time that I first met him as a teenager. He was dead serious. Not joking at all. Near the end of our second round of being friends, he told me that there was only one thing that stopped him from being a serial killer when he was young. I can't remember what that one thing was, but I've never met anyone else, in my entire life, who has said anything of the sort or who can remotely relate to this. This situation is the most ridiculous and the most inconvenient and the most terrible situation conceivable. There is nothing that will be good enough for me. The best thing is for me to die. I would be happy if I could die and leave my new friend some money. It would be a joy to think of, as I take my last breath. I mean I am destroyed. I suffer so much and my suffering will never go away. I've been researching this handicap that I have. It is a little not typical and I thus far haven't found a neurological disorder or any other type of disorder that has my specific symptoms, but I'm getting a better idea of how my brain is damaged. My handicap, to be specific, is that I cannot process a given cognitive load without great strain and hardship. My brain has been weakened and simple tasks, or even thinking of simple tasks, amount to an enormous or impossible to take on cognitive load. There are dozens of cognitive processing resources that you use in a given day. Some individual tasks may involve 20 or more, just in one task. My attention is profoundly impaired, also my executive function, and as far as I can tell, I think that nearly every cognitive processing resource that I have is severely impaired. I'm going to talk to a neurologist. I need to document this for social security. I've got to make sure that they don't try to send me back to work, which is a good way to get someone killed. I am so extremely grateful for the social security administration and DDS. I won my second appeal. Only 13% of applicants who are denied on their initial app win their appeal. The rest have to wait 1 to 2 years to see an administrative judge. I got my file from the local office in hickory. I saw their documentation for how they made their decision. It is a very tough process and they did right by me. This neurological damage that I have is a very severe handicap. Social security likes objective documentation, and I need to get either a brain scan or a set of neurological tests. You can forget me ever being able to make a living again, although I would do a lot better on an increased dosage of adderall. I'm going to try for that. In my research, I found out some stuff about how it makes sense that this would help my handicap. This is not a surprise, because it has been the one thing that helps me the entire time, since May 2019. People say this ridiculous crap that I'm "addicted."

That's a strange word to use, but sure. I'm addicted to not letting my whole life collapse and get worse and worse, right in front of me, as I am helpless to do anything about it. I'm addicted to not losing everything that I own to a credit card company. They would have taken it all, and I need my money. I need my cell phone. I need all of what I worked so hard for, and most of all, I need my bed. I need my bed because I need a place to die. I'm addicted to not suffering like a terminally ill person all day everyday, for 273 days straight, like I did when the cruel murderers at the justice department had their shameless and indecent underlings take away my medication, the only thing that helps me, for daring to challenge Wells Fargo's impunity, for daring to make such a challenge to an agency that advertises its mission as being about the rule of law. You are addicted to all of these same things that I am addicted to, you just don't know it yet because no one has did this to you. If you became handicapped from a brain injury and your whole life was collapsing right in front of you, day after day, minute by minute, as you are helpless to do anything about it, you would do whatever you could that would help you fight back so that you could save everything that you ever cared about and that you worked your whole life for. If you were suffering like a terminally ill person, so much that being under the tire of a moving semi truck sounded better and better all of the time, and you suffer like this every day, you would do whatever you could to get your medication back so that you don't suffer like that. The upside to being terminally ill is that you die. Your pain is over one day. Not so for me, after my medication is taken away. I just suffer day after day after day after day, on and on, it is endless. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

To continue my story about my ex friend...and I don't know if you even care to hear this. I have had a sense that possibly the DOJ is more on my side and more understanding of me and my situation than before, but to continue—"Brian" that I mention, that is Brian K. Bass. At different times, I have put the probability that he is some sort of agent from maybe 10% to 70%. I can't be sure. If he is, the people that he is after are white supremacist terrorists. He has an usually large collection of funny memes and jokes, and he's pretty eccentric. This seems possibly like a tactic that is being deliberately used to disarm people. People have trouble laughing and being skeptical of someone at the same time. Whether he is pretending or not, he presents himself as an avid white supremacist. His personal facebook wall has some of the most horrifying things, like pictures of emaciated people in concentration camps, with cruel jokes being made of them in the text of the meme. I find him to be kind of fascinating. I've never met anyone like him before. He barely knows that I exist. I have never directly talked to him. My ex friend would celebrate Hitler's birthday with him, on Facebook and maybe elsewhere. Would comment on his posts and append "88" to the end of his comments. 88 is a code for heil Hitler. He has also tried to get my friend to start a sons of Odin chapter in the local area. I am getting agitated and will have to cut this off for now. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm feeling bad about my worker in Pakistan. He's always sending me sales pitches and telling me how bad he needs money. He lowers the price quite often. On the round of work before this last one, he told me to just name my own price and send him the work. He said he'd work for anything and came from a poor family. I couldn't do it. I took his last quote that he gave me before the one where he said he'll work for anything. Told him that I would pay him that, gave him half the work, and told him that I'd be back when I put together the other half. By the time that I had the other half ready, I decided that I would take the very first quote he gave me, before he started lowering the price. That quote, I assumed, was a little ambitious for him. And I told you wrong. I remember now. I couldn't put the work together and he kept telling me how bad he needed work. So I paid him for the work upfront and told him that he could do it when I was able to put it together. The total he quoted me was $24. I paid him $10 one week and then $10 more the next week. Then when I had the work ready for him, he owed me the work and I owed him $4. I told him that after he was done I would pay him the $40 he originally asked for. So he owed me the work and I owed him $20. He's been desperate again, and I'm running out of money fast. I need a lot of very expensive medical tests and treatment. It's going to put a massive dent in me very fast, in the near term future. I sent him a lowball offer and he was more than happy to take it. I decided that I would up what I paid him by 20%. So I told him that. That's been about 3 days ago. He was extremely happy, but I've been thinking about this, and he is getting paid next to nothing. I had to think of how much time that it would take me to do this, and I mean this poor young man is working himself to death. So when he gets back to me with the work, I'm going to bump him up again. It's an odd thing, but this is how I am. He was happy, very happy, to take my lowball. Then I upped his pay and sent him the work and he thanked me profusely. It seems like a win/win from every direction, and I think a lot of people would just go with it. For that matter, I'd say half or more of people wouldn't have upped his pay 20% like I did. But I want him to get something for his work. He will be overjoyed to get more money, when he gets back with the work. My little woman is starting a small business with the money I am sending her on the 12th. I care so much for her and I hope that I don't end up ripping her heart out. I'm such a difficult person. I ask for so much out of life and it is terrible what this can do to people. "I ask for so much out of life and it is terrible what this can do to people." - I don't ask for anything more than what I'm willing to work to get. Or I didn't, until I was disabled. But people are different and my high standards and my ruthless ambition are really a problem. I have to realize that very few people are extremists or revolutionaries the way that I am. They're not looking to knock the ball into another universe with every swing. They don't think of life in grand terms. They don't think of the person they want to be in grand terms. They feel their own limitations and they seem to most often be trying harder than I give them credit for.

I am fascinated with him the way that a scientist is fascinated with the subject of his work. That's what I mean. I have this endless curiosity and I am always trying solve every puzzle that I come across. Brian K. Bass is an odd one in many ways. This thing where I think he's possibly an agent, if I were able to talk directly with him, say on the phone, I would be able to figure him out very quickly. I'd say an hour would do it very easily. And it's not that I care. I'd actually prefer that he is an agent. Much easier to cope with that than it is to cope with the reality of such a hate filled person. White supremacist terrorists belong in prison cells.

I'm getting sick of this topic, so I'll try to finish this today. His thing he says about Candi "great cover for HIV", I've given a more complete story in my chat with Courtney. And this is another thing that you will notice, if you pay attention. My stories check out, down to the finest details, in most cases. The more time goes on the more opportunities there are for 3rd parties to confirm everything that I say. I told Courtney about this in may 2019. I had told Jenny about it in January 2019, and probably before then. These texts are from December 2019. I'll tell it again, what this "HIV" thing is about. Candi is a woman he led on and groomed and intended to use and discard for many years. She was completely under a spell, in regards to him, for a very long time. He knows how to pour it on thick, and some women are really in need of a man who pours it on thick. She had a very high paying job in NY, and this was a huge motivator for him. He wanted a woman who could have him living the high life. She was also very attractive. Most of the women that he actually got were not. At one point, she quit her job in NY, with plans to move to the mountains to be with him. He had encouraged this, I am sure. He had told me that he hoped she could get a job at Edward Jones or some similar place up here, so that she could make a lot of money here. At this same time, he told me that he could never fall in love with her and would never marry her, because she had "had dark meat." It disgusts me to think of this. He is referring to her dating a black man at some point in the past. It is such a sickening thing to say. He was going to get her to completely upend her life and go through all of this effort, so that he could use her for sex and money. What would have happened is she would have moved up here and he would have used her for sex. At the same time, he would be milking her for money and using that money to attract other women to cheat on her with. He would destroy her life and rip out her heart and not feel the least bit bad about it. After he threw me under the bus that last time that I reference in that IM, I contacted Candi. We started talking fairly regularly and I told her some things to warn her. I wanted to save her from what he would have done to her. I told her about Susan and about how he had talked to her in the exact same terms. Told her about his crimes against children in the past, and told her about how, after these brain surgeries, there was no hope for him to ever be any better. As we talked, she told me about how she had to go to a clinic to get injections for some blood condition that she had. Told me about how she would be on the phone with him, crying uncontrollably about all of the poor people she saw at this clinic. Her telling me this was not the first time I had heard about these injections. He had told me about this same thing, quite a long time before. He never said a thing about her crying. Nope. His version went like this: "She has to go and get injections for some shit. She claims that it's for some shit about..." It's been too long and I can't remember the exact words for the first half of his spiel, but I'll never forget what came next. It goes- "But I'm sure it's because she's got AIDS from getting ass fucked by niggers." This is what crying hysterically on the phone with him gets you. This person has no heart and he has no soul. Hate runs through his veins. That's how he works. It may seem that I have something to answer for, for being his friend. I've explained a lot of that to you before, I am sure. My association with this person, I can defend it completely, and after hearing the full story, no one would hold it against me the least. What would stick out to them is how kind hearted I am and what a big person I am. This is what sticks out to people repeatedly, when they learn about my life. And this one the theme of my life. It is one big reason that I valued my privacy so much. I do not have anything to hide, not in the end. It's not about having things to hide. It's about having things that have to be explained. When I first meet people, they're not going to stick around for the explanation. So I keep a whole lot to myself. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

" My stories check out, down to the finest details, in most cases."- my punctuation was off. It is " My stories check out, down to the finest details in most cases." My stories always check out, I think. I'm not sure if there is a single exception in the past 10 years. I can't remember every story that I've told. I just know that I'm extremely honest and that I value the truth. There may have been some time that fudged a story to help a friend, I'm not sure. I have no idea what you think about me sending you messages like this. And as soon as I say that, I've told you wrong. I've probably got a handful of ideas as to what you might think. These people did this to me, and then you jumped in and helped them. If I am to get a solution of some sort out of this, I have nowhere else to turn. When the United States of America turns on me, I don't know where else to go, and this is largely your responsibility. You participated in what they did, and before that happened, it was your rightful responsibility to do something about this situation, and it still is your responsibility. What's on my mind right now is that I am suffering a little bit but my day has also been brightened. My girlfriend continues to live the high life. April 12th was my payday and that makes it her payday too. I gave her a lot of money all at once. She is going to use it to start a small business. That was her plan. I don't think she did the math the first time, when I told her how much in USD I would be sending. She seemed to feel awfully rich when the converted amount showed up in her account. In any event, she is celebrating with her family. She bought them a big box of groceries and sent me a picture of it. Then she took a bunch of her family out to a restaurant. She goes to the one that is her brother's favorite. It does me so much good to see this boy smile. He seems so happy. She cares about her family more than anything in the world. She loves them so much. It lights her world up when she is able to provide for them. Nothing makes her happier, and they have been living very well since I started helping her.

You are seeing the words of a dying man. I feel like a dying man for most of just about every day, and I have felt this way since April and May 2019. It is so horrible, you can't imagine. Remember this as you read everything that I type and as you contemplate your next actions. The story with my ex friend keeps going and going and going. I sent you an audio where I seem to be boasting about "the world" being "0 and 300,000" at getting stuff by me. When I said that, I was making a point about this ridiculous notion that a 20 year old woman is conning me or that a 20 year old woman could con me. I didn't mean to brag like that and bragging wasn't the point. I have now deleted twice, overly long explanations of what I'm getting at. The world isn't 0 and 300,000. The world has scored some points, but I figure them out in the end. The other point, my overly long descriptions detailed how I figure people out, up to and including stalkers and pathological killers, and how I, in general figure out people, and how the idea that a 20 year old woman is going to con me is just foolish. For now, I feel like saying that I'm sorry for this situation. It's like the perpetual end of the world hanging over people's heads and I can imagine this getting just exhausting. It's a terrible, terrible situation. The fact that I am a human being is a real problem for us. I'm full of suffering and anger and all sorts of other things that provoke me to fight with this situation. If I were some kind of AI machine, things could proceed more logically and rationally. I can't stand this. Things were so good in November 2017, before this happened. Now things can't get good again, ever. "The world isn't 0 and 300,000." - this is also related to the story about my ex friend. He got a lot by me, in my second round of being his friend. He was being a genuinely better person, for sure, and this was particularly true in the beginning. As time went on, he was also pretending with a lot of it. I didn't realize just what I was dealing with, for so long, because of this. This woman Susan, for instance. This is an extremely pitiful woman, who has a history of repeated, severe domestic violence victimizations. She is also a multiple times rape victim. She comes across as so sweet and so humble. She had some man she was afraid of, and my ex friend would tell me about how he was going to protect her from him. He'd use the typical man's "throw him to the alligators" type of language. He would tell me how disgusted he was with this guy and his violent behavior and abusive attitude and how despicable it was for him to make this poor woman feel afraid. A year or two down the road, when he throws me under the bus, and I end up talking to Candi, I saw how much compassion he really had for this poor woman. Candi eventually got in touch with her. I told Candi about her and how my ex friend was stringing both of them along in parallel. This was a shattering of Candi's illusions and she seemed to have trouble accepting it. She didn't think that I was lying, but she wanted to hear it from Susan. So she contacts Susan, who tells her the exact same thing that I told her as well as some more details that I didn't give. Candi contacts my ex friend to confront him. Among the things he had to answer for was how he had engaged in a sex act with Susan, during the same time that he was wooing Candi. From what I heard of Susan's account, she described it as something that she gave into, out of shock and disbelief. She had told herself that "his brain surgery had done something to him, and brought out something predatory." She basically tried to tell herself that there is an explanation for this, that this isn't the person she has known and who has been so kind to her. As she went into denial, she reluctantly gave in. My ex friend responds to Candi by making the most awful accusations against Susan. He spoke in terms of her being a sex maniac, with no virtue. Said that she begged him for a sexual experience and that he finally gave in. He gave, as evidence of his fidelity towards Candi, the fact that he never had sex with Susan, when he could have at any point that he wanted to, because Susan is of such pathetically easy virtue and is such a fiend that all he had to do was ask. This was one among many examples I would see, as I talked to Candi and she relayed what he said back to her, of the most ruthless and heartless manipulation you can imagine. I never fully realized just how completely without concern for these women that he was. Someone with either a heart, a soul, or a conscience, could not be this way to anyone. I thought back to how he had spoken to me about how he felt about Susan, and what instantly stuck out was how he was speaking in exactly the same terms that I would have. He was mirroring my own attitude and my own values. He got this by me, how the whole time he was being an actor. He didn't completely hide his dark side, but he hid enough of it to fool me. And "his dark side" is not the most accurate way to describe it. It is more accurate to say his true self. This darker version of him was who he was around the clock. Even after everything he had said and done in my presence, I never perceived him to be someone who could be as heartless and as cruel as he was to these poor women. I am a self-centered person in a lot of ways. I am self-centered to an extreme, in a lot of ways. What sticks out about him, though, is how the other person doesn't matter at all. He is totally unconcerned about them and their needs and the damage that he is going to cause them. I'd say that most likely, he is conscious of this. He knows that he doesn't care about the other person, and that he's just using them for his own ends. He got this by me because I am naive and because I trusted him. I have a quality of naïveté, where I do not see the viciousness in people. I overestimate their desire to do right and their concern about their conduct, and the underestimate their tendency to be unfair to others. I have had trouble trusting people a lot in my life, and on the flip side, I have trusted people that I shouldn't. Jenny got one by me, in conning me out of a link to my Facebook profile. Here it was me trusting Jenny, which is among the worst mistakes I have made and ever will make. And this is what I find about not trusting people. Others have noticed this about me for a long time. It has stuck out to more than one person, how I didn't seem to trust other people. They seem to see it as some kind of unnecessary personality quirk. It doesn't seem that way to me, as I approach 43 completed years of living on planet earth. It seems to me that not trusting people is extremely rational and is the appropriate thing to do. The biggest hardships of my life have come as a result of trusting people. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

"I have a quality of naïveté, where I do not see the viciousness in people. I overestimate their desire to do right and their concern about their conduct, and the underestimate their tendency to be unfair to others."-for one example, I have done this with you. I send you audios where I am begging for help and where I also give you information about what I'm doing. I do this as you are engaging in ongoing crime against me. The information I give is useful for anyone who seeks to criminally victimize me, and I give it to you anyways. I trust you for no reason. I believe in your humanity and that you care about me, also for no reason. What I mean when I say that I don't see the viciousness in others, I'm speaking of the more benign kind of viciousness that almost everyone has. Viciousness is never really benign, but you have to distinguish this from the viciousness of different types of violent people, like murderers and power hungry men. What I am speaking of is a slight viciousness, that is nowhere as pronounced as that of those types of people. It is the nature of people to do things like to be dishonest, or to put up a facade, or to deliberately screw over other people, or to stab people in the back, to be pushy and aggressive with their goals, and to in general be out for their own interests in life and to play dirty when they have to or when they can get away with it. I do not have this variety of viciousness, and this can make me blind to its existence in others. What's funny is that sometimes this naive attitude will bring out the best in people. They can tell that I don't sense their viciousness and the viciousness of others, and they will be somewhat amused by this. At the same time, it's like my desire to be fair with them and to see the best in them inspires them to be a better version of themselves. They will be fair with me and keep screwing over everyone else. It's like they only play dirty in life because they feel like they have to because of everyone else. I can't think of a specific example at the moment, at least not one that I can narrate and explain, and this is just because I'm feeling lazy. It is a very familiar experience. It's etched in my mind, independent of any one specific instance. The not trusting people component comes out in my interactions with others, at least that's one place. I am wary of giving people information that can be used against me. There are a few other elements of this lack of trust. This thing about giving people information can be a symptom of paranoid personality disorder, but I don't think that's the case with me. It is me, again, being rational. I'm wary about giving such info, that can be used against me, because people will reliably use it against me. I am someone who has been opposed by something not far from everyone that I have encountered in life. If they haven't opposed me yet, that don't mean that they won't ever. I pretty well understand why I am opposed so consistently and with such a lack of inhibition. It's not a mystery at all. It is a difficult circumstance to have in life, however. Then there is the fact that, when I meet someone, if the first thing that I do is to tell myself "one day, not too far from today, I will be a massive liability for this person", I'm going to be right not all that much less than 100% of the time. Why do I want to give information that can be used against me to someone who is going to be facing prison time because of me? What are the chances that they capitalize on this information? "I do not have this variety of viciousness, and this can make me blind to its existence in others." -I see it when it's right in front of my face. I see it as clearly as it can be seen then. It is just that when left to my own devices, I all too easily can start to think of others as being like me. When my imagination takes over, that's what I do. I think that all people do this, this thing I describe, unconsciously assuming that other people work like we do. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

"Even after everything he had said and done in my presence, I never perceived him to be someone who could be as heartless and as cruel as he was to these poor women." -this may not make sense, given what I have told you. I have told you things like torturing animals, horrifically, torturing people, wanting to make a "snuff" video, making an illegal movie featuring his 16 year old girlfriend, crimes against children, and the list goes on. The bit of text that I quoted at the top, this is in reference to our second round of being friends. I believed that he had changed. Especially in those first few years, he was acting like a totally different person, and it was convincing, because it was genuine. It wasn't who he was as a condition of being, but it was who he was, as a result of trying very hard to be a good person. I didn't fully get the difference between these two for a long time. I had an attitude of hey, we were all straight outta hell in one way or another, back then, and I've sure changed and I'm glad he's changed too. He thought the world of me. He could tell that I cared about him, and I was loyal and would go out of my way to help him. He thought that I knew everything. He told others that I was his "spirit guide." He would go out of his way to help me too, out of this high opinion he had of me and how much I would do to help him. I may be the first person that he spoken of in the most positive terms when speaking behind their back. He is very, extremely two faced. Has been his whole life. Talks about people like they're pieces of shit, after he is overly nice to them to their face. But he would defend me, when others would run their mouths behind my back. That's an odd thing to do, for him. The first problems started to happen when he took on his "new personality." And this is very painful to think about. He had such potential and it was such an effort that he made. What has now become of him is terrible and also heartbreaking. But I will continue. His new personality was obnoxious and it started to be hard to be around him in public. Me and our mutual friend, a girl named Kelly, would plan how we could dodge him and not let him know that we were out. This was as individuals and also as a group. There is no containing him, once he gets around. Your only option is basically to put up with him. I had hoped that I could steer him into a better direction. My hopes were for nothing, because these brain surgeries ruined him. He had one after another after another, and these surgeons would always tell him stuff like "I'm looking at these last readings, and I'm very confident that I've found where the issue originates." He was trying to get rid of his seizures. In about 2005, he had started having seizures all of the sudden, and he hated them. Had to have his drivers license taken away. He had his first surgery, and then had a seizure within no time of getting home. He'd immediately start looking into getting another one, after each one failed. Some doctor would say some bullshit like what I told you, he'd get the surgery, and then before he even got on the plane to go home, he'd have a seizure. These surgeries ruined him. The first effect, that started to set in after the very first one, was to turn him into what I call the "uncensored old him." His racism returned and it would get worse as time progressed. His new personality took on a whole new level, and it was really a pain in the ass, the way he would act in public. I wanted version 2 to come back again, and I thought that I could somehow help him. I was also very worried about the consequences of pissing him off, as time went on. Another factor is that I felt bad for him. Those 3 things are why I continued to be his friend. The subsequent brain surgeries made the old him more and more uncensored, and they also handicapped his mind. He's nowhere near as handicapped as I am, and he's not handicapped in the same way as me, but these surgeries damaged him. He is extremely forgetful, and he has a very hard time controlling himself. He will sometimes speak to you, and what he says is literally him directly spilling his uncensored private thoughts. These are things that he normally would have wanted to hide and things he would have never said to anyone. When he does this, I can see exactly what is happening. It is one sign, among many, that his brain doesn't work anymore. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980): [REDACTED]

" I just know that I'm extremely honest and that I value the truth." -there are some exceptions to this, that very rarely come up. It has to do with things that are not fair to me. It's mostly the truth dressed up real nice, but probably some outright lies too. I'd have to think. This comes up extremely rarely and is such a nonissue as to amount to nothing. There are more bank headlines and the best thing that can happen, probably, is for me to die. I keep fighting and I can't give up my fight. It is such an injustice that I am dealt and I am given to having some affection for this life at times. The problem is that there is nothing that can be done that will make things ok for me. Whatever is done for me, I will never do it Justice, not as that would be seen in the eyes of others. Billions of dollars is supposed to make people happy. It will make me happier, but I will still be a demolished human being and I will still ache for death so much of the time. That's assuming I get billions of dollars. To me that is what Justice would be and it will rip me in half if I don't get it. It doesn't matter though. When death is your best option in all possible worlds, what makes a difference. I can move to another country that isn't so rotten to me and write a book for the people who live in this country and who have been told lies about me. My book will be for everyone too, no matter where they live. Allie Roe was supposed to be put in handcuffs, as she and everyone else involved in this figured out that it was a mistake to mess with me. They were supposed to cry and to look back with regret for the rest of their lives, the day that crossed someone as tough and as much a fighter as I am. They would have been afraid of me. They would be terrified of ever crossing me again, because I don't let them get away with it, and they know they are going to get hammered. What a tough and what a worthwhile human being I would be in the eyes of others. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980): [REDACTED]

I'm feeling good today though. This has been one of the best days I've had in a long time. I've had much lower symptoms. I randomly have days like this and they are a blessing. I talked to my provider yesterday. He says that if my physician isn't concerned with my blood pressure, he is not either. I have done the right thing. I had felt bad about not saying more about going to this cardiologist, but I would have only been wrong if my cardiologist told me that I needed to do something about my adderall. My cardiologist wasn't the least bit concerned. I directly and explicitly brought the issue up with him, and he didn't recommend any changes or think that there was any concern. You may wonder why I'm telling you this. At the rate I'm going, you're going to get found out in not much more time. One of your tactics, I am sure, is to issue a propaganda campaign. I would hope that by now, you have seen the error of your ways and will try to be honest and contrite. On the other hand, your propaganda campaign will necessarily involve taking things that I have said out of context, and using this as a means to deliberately mislead others. You have plenty to go on, with this. I have sent you 100s of hours of audios and I have sent you emails that probably total in the thousands. Among the claims you can make is that I have been dishonest with my provider, based on what I have shared about that. I am giving you the full information, so as to have my record with you complete. Any propaganda campaign against me can and will be dissected and proven wrong. It will be a mountain of work for me, but will show you as being blatantly dishonest in the end. This assumes that you do not murder me or use your power advantage against me in any other way that would cripple me. I'm fighting a fight that I cannot win, not unless the other side keep their behavior within the bounds of what is lawful and ethical. That is what I hope that you will do. I have no choice but to fight, as much as I hate it. I am handicapped very severely and will die in the streets of hunger or of the temperature one day, if my life is allowed to go on. In re being dishonest with my provider, I have felt this way at times, and it is utterly heartbreaking to think of. It is mostly me beating myself up, in contexts where others would not beat themselves up. But he is so incredibly kind and has done so much to help me. Any information that I withhold from him, I do so out of fear. My life is extremely fragile and I suffer very badly. I am terrified of things getting worse. I just found this statistic online-Pakistan Annual Household Income per Capita reached 587.069 USD This explains a lot. I've got a lot of people in foreign nations living lavishly off of the money that I pay them. That's at least according to their standards. My worker can't get enough work, and there is something strange going on. On the second to last job I sent him, not counting the one that I sent yesterday, I had between 50 and 70 people download the work. I asked him why I had so many downloads, and he said he had no idea. It was legit downloads from Pakistan. Might have had 2 bots or maybe 3, but that's the extent of it. So on the next job, I told him to download the file so that I could delete it. I often send an instructions video and a file, but on this one, I just sent a file. He downloaded it and I deleted it, and there were no more downloads or attempted downloads. I sent more work yesterday, and I've got 25 people downloading the instructions/how to video. If I ask him why, he's going to tell me that he doesn't know again, and maybe he's right, but I do suspect that I might be feeding a small village with this work. I am paying him more for the one I sent yesterday, because I'm still feeling bad about how hard he worked on the job before that vs how much he got paid. He made way more than what he is used to, if the above figure is indicative of his situation. He's got a computer with windows 11, so he's more blessed than a lot of those people. The lady that had the children's ministry that I was supporting told me that the parents of those children provide them with food "with great difficulty", and that the children frequently had to go without food for multiple days at a time. I told my worker that I'm a liability for the economy of the entire earth, and that if I get a lot of money out of my fight, things will get better for him. He replied "May God give you success in your case." He's a very nice and kind young man. I am really impressed with him and it will rip your heart out to think of how hard his life is and how hard he tries. He is very religious too, I can tell. He's recently replaced "Allah" with "God", when he wishes for blessings to come my way. He's figured out that I'm not a Muslim, I think, is what prompted that change. He's asked Allah to give me back my health on more than one occasion. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

He either rents these computers or he has multiple people helping him or both. He sends me screenshots of information he is missing, and they are from different computers, I just noticed. I have one from a windows 11 based machine and several that look like windows 7 or vista. My little woman continues to live the high life. She got her hair done the other day. Looks real nice. She is full of smiles and says she misses me really badly. I don't talk to her as much when I'm having better times. I've got to do something with this fight. I'm running out of money fast. The day I win my fight will be the start of yet another nightmare, I am very afraid. I don't want to win every bit as much as I want to win. It's a terrible situation, but this fight is all that I know, all that I have, and all that I have cared about for years. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

And I'm sick and god damn tired of Broughton Hospital committing crimes against me. If I get money, I'm going to have to hire a team of attorneys to regulate them myself. They've been running wild for decades, probably more like a hundred years, and HHS OCR isn't going to help me anytime this century. I sent those deadbeats a complaint in march 2020. Instead of attending to my airtight case, they turn me down so that they can sit on their asses. They could have stopped Wells Fargo from getting those records, which now have the potential to cause havoc and hell for millions of powerless and vulnerable people. I probably shouldn't have said that, but I mean just think about this. In 2020, I am being criminally victimized by people for whom I am a prisoner at will. These people are rabidly committing crimes against me. This would seem to put me in a very vulnerable situation and you'd think that they'd want to help me. They don't tell me what I need to do. They don't tell me why my submission is not good enough. They simply do not want to help me. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

<https://www.nytimes.com/2023/04/26/business/first-republic-bank.html?smid=nytcore-ios-share&referringSource=articleShare> If you don't want NYT tracking where you got this link from, delete the question mark and everything after it, then copy it and paste it in a browser. That's a general rule when you get links. That question mark and everything after it is called a query string. Everything on that string is a candidate for getting saved in a database. You can assume that everything on that string is either used in a database query or saved in a database. You won't be wrong that much. Sometimes the query string, or parts of it, is necessary to get to the right webpage. It might have a parameter for the product id for a product or a category id for a page that displays all products under a certain category. Other parameters are just used to track you, and they will often be named in ways that give it away that this is what they are used for. You can delete individual parameters and leave the essential ones in there. When you copy a link from another website and paste it into your browser, the website has no way of knowing where you got the link from. For example, if you click the hyperlink on this email, a header will be passed to NYT's web server that says you were "referred" by gmail. The web server can be programmed to capture that information and store it in a database. This situation sucks, not mine but the situation in this article and the broader situation that it is a part of. When I was a child, up until about age 16, I attended church services pretty frequently. This was in the 1980s and the 1990s. Especially in the 80s, there were a lot of businesses that refused to be open on Sundays. A lot of people also refused to work on Sundays. The people in the churches would debate this. The big point on the side of the businesses that were open Sundays, and the individuals who worked on Sundays, was the Bible verse that says "the sabbath was made for man, not man for the sabbath." I have had an attitude for a long time that laws are made for man, not man for laws. In other words, laws have utility for our lives, and that is the only source of their value. If following some law is going to crash the whole world, it is an extreme form of insanity to follow that law, particularly when no one suffers when you don't follow that law. What you don't do is crash the whole world. Who on earth can defend crashing the whole world over anything, when you have the power to stop it. The answer to that last question is some substantial portion of every lawmaker in America, quite possibly a majority. The qualification is that they don't see the world crashing ahead of time. They don't understand this machine called the economy. To be fair, no one understands it all that well. It is far too complex. I don't think that there is anyone who has called what will happen in the future with a great deal of accuracy, not on a consistent basis. The possible exceptions are these people who pride themselves on making predictions, except they aren't exceptions. Their strategy is to make as many predictions as possible and to then overhype the ones that come out right. I am weak today and will continue this later.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

The point I was getting to is that the federal reserve and others within the government need flexibility in addressing situations that could have a big effect the broader economy. They shouldn't have their hands tied behind their back and be forced to watch the world go down the tubes. I think the best thing for first republic would be for the government to intervene, and I mean someone other than the FDIC. For sure, the FDIC needs to bail out every depositor if it fails. I believe that there has already been a guarantee issued that the FDIC will do that. These government bailouts go against many tenets of our society. They are also extremely unfair to ordinary people, for whom there aren't a lot of bailouts or any at all. But what do you do? The problem goes back to the fact that we can't predict what the economy will do. Things that are completely unexpected come up all of the time. So when you have laws and policies being written as if we know what will happen ahead of time, it's bound to cause problems. I think a good solution would be to have policies that prevent bailouts and impose discipline on banks, but to also have policies that allow you to make exceptions on a broad range of policies when the economy is at stake. The government should be allowed to use discretion and do what is necessary. There would be people who opposed this. There are people who would be angered, but I would direct them back to my original point. This is the hypothetical situation- We have some law that says what we can and cannot do. The economy of the whole world is at stake. We know what we need to do to fix it. We have the full power and ability to stop the economy from crashing. The problem is that previously written laws say we can't take the actions that we need to take. And so we just sit and watch the whole world crash. This is relevant to my situation, because I thought that there would be some kind of think outside the box solution applied to it, in the event that somehow the conduct of the people at this bank posed a threat to the economy. I didn't have it worked out as to how their conduct could do this, but I thought that it might somehow be possible. But the sense that I have gotten is that the DOJ isn't allowed to think outside of the box or that you don't see it as an option. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

And I'm sick of the ridiculous, demeaning behavior of Wells Fargo. We have a process that goes like this- Wells Fargo behaves in a way that is totally self-centered, indecent, dishonest, and immoral. I respond by trying to see the other sides side of this and by thinking in terms of a win win and being concerned about innocent third parties who may be affected. Wells Fargo responds by behaving in a way that is totally self-centered, indecent, dishonest, and immoral, and also very often vulgar and demeaning to me. I'm starting a new email. If you wonder why I email you so much and why I give you some details that don't have much to do with you, that's kind of a good question. I'd say in general it is because you and this bank have taken ownership of my life, essentially as if you are god himself (and god himself doesn't seem to be challenging your ownership of my life). You know more about my healthcare records than I do. I haven't looked at those healthcare records from brought in a very long time and I never read them page by page. I also haven't hired a bunch of lawyers to micro-analyze them for endless hours. You have involved my mother in your crimes. My kid sister aids in all of this too, without knowing what she's doing. You have invaded every millimeter of my existence and you have even involved my ex girlfriend in your administration of this situation. You have lied to the people at Bank of America and told them that I am a "psychopath." I could add to this list, I am sure. The justice department needs to warn people about the consequences of working for this bank or of having this bank in your life at all. I cannot resist stating, for the 750th time, that this is all a result of asking these people to have a consequences free conversation. This bank is a tyranny unlike anything that exists elsewhere in the world. Saddam Husseins regime is not even a remote comparison. Saddam Hussein and his regime had constraints on their behavior. There were things that the United States and others would not permit them to do. I see no such constraints on Wells Fargo's behavior. I want and outcome that involves these 2 things: 1. I get some form of justice 2. Wells Fargo fixes its business and cleans up its actI have often felt that I am alone in desiring each of these. No one else wants me to get Justice and no one else wants this bank to clean up its act. And I'm just venting here. I am getting very upset, at times, out of Wells Fargo's self-centeredness and Wells Fargo's endless process of digging in its heels and trying to deny that Wells Fargo made a mistake. This is particularly a pain in the ass, when the primary method through which this reality denial is attempted is to character assassinate me. I understand the Justice Departments constraints and I know that you do want this bank to fix its behavior. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

The thing with first republic seems to be not too big a deal. There were some panic peddlers online saying that it could set off a wave of bank failures. This situation that we're in is absolutely terrible. I can't tell you how much that I hate it. I want to go back in time, to before I met Jenny or maybe before she conned me out of a link to my Facebook profile. I was treated as a person who matters and I didn't have a brain that is so terribly damaged. Among the outcomes I am contemplating as possible are some that are a complete nightmare on steroids for the other side. However I handle this, my intention is for outcomes of that nature to not occur and more generally to have this work out in some way that everything works out. In particular, I want to avoid any shit storm banking failure panic, end of the world, etc. outcomes. I don't want any such thing to ever cross anyone's mind. We need something that's fair to me but also is a positive step for the bank. And that's one problem we have, I have ideas of what is fair to me, but at the end of the day, there is a limit on how much better my life can get and there is ultimately nothing that can be done for me. It makes the whole thing seem purposeless. It seems like a terrible thing for people to have to go through, with the media, congress, etc. etc. etc. for the sake of me just continuing to suffer. My life would be a lot better if I had a lot of money though. I might be surprised as to how good it can get. I for sure need a very large amount of money, due to how handicapped that I am. I can't do anything. Adderall helps me. If I get my dose upped I can do more, but the problem is that I have not retained all of my abilities. I can work on my computer, type word documents, surf the internet, and things like this. More adderall increases those abilities, but I still have enormous trouble cleaning. Things like cleaning, making a can of soup, or cooking chef boyardee, more adderall just barely moves the needle. The needle moves so slightly that, in most cases, I still can't do them, pretty much not at all. I will never be able to live independently. I will have to pay people to clean my house, do my laundry, drive me to the drugstore, shave my face, all sorts of things like this, I will be paying people to do for the rest of my life. I also need a house that is very large. Not a Mansion, not necessarily, but very large. The purpose of this is so that my furniture can be spread out, with big gaps. My bedroom can be large, with a lot of space in it and on both sides of my bed. When things are spread out and wide open, it lessens my mental paralysis. I have found that clutter and constricted spaces have a profound paralyzing effect on my mind. It seems like constricted spaces are the worse of the two. This tiny bedroom that I'm staying in is paralyzing me very badly. I could also shave more often in my apartment in Charlotte. I moved to this apartment on November 29th, 2021. Since that time, I have shaved my face twice or at the most, 3 times. I think it is twice. Every other time I have paid a barber to shave my face. I have extreme difficulty forcing myself to shave. Most of the time I can't do it. It partly has to do with it being more complicated in the bathroom of this place. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

"In particular, I want to avoid any shit storm banking failure panic, end of the world, etc. outcomes. I don't want any such thing to ever cross anyone's mind"- what I'm saying here is I don't want there to be any talks about this or for it to cross anyone's mind as a credible threat. I want to frame this in some way where that is not even part of the picture. You will have some politicians and commentators making remarks about the bank ought to be broken up, prosecuted, shut down, etc. but such talk does not equate to a credible threat that it will happen in the minds of the public. My approach is relevant, because I have everything that I need to knock the hell out of this bank. These people have compounded their problem over and over, by piling rotten conduct on top of more rotten conduct for literally years. If their plan is to character assassinate me, good luck to them. They're going to need it and it's not going to help them. I started this fight as dramatically the good guy and they started this fight as dramatically the bad guy. Over time, I have become even more dramatically so and so have they. What they have done is so merciless and so cruel, and so totally not warranted, that they have no prayer. The shots that they take at my exemplary life will bounce right back and hit them, themselves, with 1,000x the force. The world will hate them and the world will cry with me, when they learn of my life and of my struggle. I'm not telling you this as a threat or for the purposes of boasting, but just to point out that the actual reality of this situation is one that is likely to trigger a shit storm and a hoo rah that has no parallel in recent history. The only thing that will stop that is if I express wishes to the contrary. It's not that I'm that important. It's not that people will abandon the self-focus that is part of ordinary human nature. It is that people are human and they have a heart and they have decency, and my story is very compelling. The life I have lived is an accomplishment in itself, and people will recognize that accomplishment the same way that they recognize any other accomplishment. If the people at Wells Fargo think that the details of my life are going to cause sympathy for "them", they are completely out of their minds and they've got it backwards 180 degrees. The last thing on earth they would do, if they had the least bit of sanity, would be to bring attention to my life. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

" You will have some politicians and commentators making remarks about the bank ought to be broken up, prosecuted, shut down, etc" -if I decide to put this in the media, which is what is most likely going to happen, I'm sure they will contact you before they publish anything. It may be that they accommodate a timed release, due to the seriousness of what has happened. What I am saying is they might be willing to let you announce this before they do, and time it in such a way as to prevent a any kind of chaos. I have no idea how the hell that we are going to explain it to the public that Wells Fargo had me kidnapped. The items subsequent to that are easier to explain, even though it is ruthless cruelty from start to finish. And I mean I've got a list of rotten conduct that is god knows how long. They've not gotten away with anything that I'm aware of. There are things that I've never mentioned. I've lost track. I'm on the fence, just barely, if they had someone monitoring me at my apartment in Charlotte. Trying to think of other on the fence stuff. But back to the topic of how we explain this and the calls to have the bank prosecuted, if they come, we could reference my handicap and how it would be enormously difficult for me to endure a trial like that. To be honest, I don't think that I could do it. I am so extremely impaired that I find it overwhelming to get items off the shelf from the refrigerator. I can't stand it when people talk to me at unplanned times. My mother has a bad habit of doing this and it causes me terrible distress. I yelled at her the other morning for doing this. It would also potentially be dangerous for the person who cross examines me. I am extraordinarily sensitive to how people treat me and I become hostile and start to have impulses to be violent over what seems like nothing to others. I've had over 13,000 profile visits on twitter in the past 3 months not counting may. My complaint gets clicked quite a bit, but I have no way of knowing who saves it. I think the safe assumption is that 97%+ open it in a browser and then close it within 3 to 5 seconds. I get about 20 to 30 clicks per thousand visits, with a small portion being bots. The majority of my clicks come from a mystery source with an empty user agent string in the headers. The clicks from the mystery source are correlated with how many views my tweets get. More tweet views = more clicks, and it's like a perfect correlation. The mystery source comes from Lco. and I can't tell if it's some kind of crawler or actual people using a VPN or what. <https://twitter.com/thehill/status/1654125543523237888?s=46&t=ClrZ4M-ovXxMaXNk-8B8zw>"Almost half in new poll concerned about their money's safety in banks" This is The Hill. I have been watching some of this news outlets videos on YouTube. They are pretty impressive. They seem to have a high degree of objectivity. What I wish that they and other news outlets wouldn't do is post stuff like this. This gives me a very uneasy feeling. It's not the poll that makes me the most uneasy, it's the fact that this headline is being posted. People do what other people do. That's how people work. That 50% that isn't worried about their money- guess what, a large part of them will be now. People use this faulty logic that "if people are worried about the safety of their money, they must have a good reason to be worried about the safety of their money." That's how their minds work. I say that this is faulty logic, because it doesn't take into account that the largest part of that 50% never went to school for finance, never went to school for economics, and don't know much at all about how banks work (like the occupy Wall Street kid who went viral over his brilliant assessment that included "when you give banks your money, they make 9X the initial investment"). What happens now is there is a substantial fear of banks failing that is manufactured out of thin air. There is no underlying reality to base this fear on "until the fear itself exists". The baseless fear becomes its own justification, because it itself is a credible threat to the system. This is terrible. I do not like seeing this at all. It appears to me that people are numb to the idea that the world as they know it could cease to exist at any moment. We are fooled by good times, and by an illusory sense of safety, into assuming that prosperity, or at least some level of stability, is a feature of the universe. That this is just how life works. It's as if to suffer an irreversible collapse would be a violation of some law of nature. Such a possibility doesn't feel real to us. This banking crisis + these politicians about to let us default on our debt while they squabble, this is playing with dynamite. These 2 factors are a major threat independent of one another. Having both of them at play at the same time is a disaster waiting to happen. That these politicians don't have sweat beads bubbling and veins popping out of their foreheads leads me to believe that they don't get the gravity of this situation. It is also possible that I am overstating the gravity of the situation. There is plenty that I don't understand. I do think that I get the broad strokes though. It's like if I've got a Jenga tower that has been built up really high, and there are corners of blocks poking out at the edges all over the thing, I don't get out a ruler and a scientific calculator and start doing physics calculations, to fine tune my understanding of every detail of this particular Jenga tower and what might happen to it. I just do everything I can to not rock the table it is sitting on. This situation with me that we are in is a nightmare. I'm still thinking about how to do this. I have no good answer. To give myself something to do, I continue with my fight like I'm on the aggressive. I may stay on the aggressive, but whatever that I do, my plan is to do everything that I can to avoid third parties being harmed and I am not sure that I will do anything if I see a possibility that my actions will cause panic peddling headlines. I have been damaged very very badly. I deserve Justice of some sort and I will never make it if I don't get it. The other problem is that it will take a whole lot of money to make my life worth living, after what I've been dealt and what I've suffered and how I continue to suffer and be impaired. That creates a problem because if I were in a position to take a lesser sum of money, Wells Fargo could just make a note in their financial statements about "settling a legal matter about xyz for an immaterial amount" and be done with it. This is assuming that Wells Fargo is even willing to admit that Wells Fargo made a mistake and pay me an "immaterial amount." Wells Fargo's endless digging in its heels is an impediment too, as is its complete selfishness and its being on the offensive with continued rotten conduct. This bank doesn't seem to realize that I've got everything I need to knock the everliving hell out of it, and that nothing short of murdering me can stop me, at this point. When they keep posturing like they want to fight in a "their ruthless self-interest opposing my ruthless self-interest" battle, this just prompts me to fight back harder. Every front they attack me on is another front for me to massacre them on, that didn't exist before. My offer to compromise in a way that works out for them too is a much better option than the ruthless self-interest war. I try to turn down that war, but it is a war that I will win. I will win it decisively. The harder they fight back the worse it will be for them. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams. (980)-[REDACTED]

I have recently refrained from one thing that would possibly cause a massive headache for Wells Fargo. After I do this and after I send an email where I continue with my attempts to understand the other side, Wells Fargo continues with its digging in its heels and self-centered reality denial and self-focus. I still have refrained from this one thing. I've got so much to beat this bank absolutely to death with, and we need a resolution, that I'm in a mindset of not causing them grief over new issues. What I'm referring to is a TikTok video of a woman who was the victim of wire fraud in the amount of $24,500. The $24,500 business account wire fraud is a recurring scam. This woman blamed it on Wells Fargo, because she says she never consented and never would have consented to having a limit so high for wire transfers. This woman was on twitter too, and I told her (this was months ago) that she needed to report this to the FBI if it was interstate. I told her that it was not the banks responsibility (and I'm pretty sure that I'm right). I didn't think she had any chance of getting her money back by going to Wells Fargo. I checked her TikTok a week or so ago, and the bank gave her the money back. She had 400,000 views+ on TikTok videos about the fiasco. My first thought was to post that TikTok video in my Facebook groups, so that others could see that the way to get your money back is to get a lot of social media hits. What would have happened there is all of the other people hit with the $24.5k wire fraud scam would see this video, where the woman says "the money is back in my account this morning" and this would trigger a viral or semi-viral uproar about she got her money back and why can't they. It would be a pain in the ass for the bank, because they would have set a precedent of accepting responsibility for the wire fraud of third parties and would now have to backtrack. I decided to hit the x button on that post before I even submitted it. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

This might not work out good for anyone. This situation that we're in. I am very discouraged about the prospects of living. I am very weakened and being in the news will be like hell. It will drudge up all kinds do people from the past and cause a shit storm. I'm so weak that I question my ability to manage the shit storm. I am having a period of less symptoms. I have less shell shock and also a little less mental paralysis. The generic Wellbutrin did something chemically that increased my mental paralysis. I have now been off of it for 2 months. Stopping it helped with my mental paralysis almost immediately. I could feel a difference within a few days. I think that it is possible that I am having a continued improvement from stopping it. I don't know though. My symptoms seem to mostly be random and I've had a million theories that turned out to be wrong and/or wishful thinking. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm getting some of my strength back. I'm able to work a little bit every day, or at least I have been for the past several days. Some days are better than others. I hate this situation that we're in. I wish that I could be made whole and life could be made worth living on a smaller amount of money. This assumed that Wells Fargo has any interest in making this right. In that situation, I could make an offer to settle for something that they would call "immaterial." The bank would not have to disclose many details about what happened and there would be no need for me to be publicly known. I'm just guessing when I say that the bank won't have to disclose many details. I assume that this is how it works when things are "immaterial." We have several problems with this. One is that no amount of money that could be called immaterial to any company is going to compensate for what has happened to me. Anything less than a billion dollars, I will for sure want to die. I will probably want to die at a billion dollars and probably would want to for many times that. Then we have another major problem that relates to Wells Fargo's reality denial. In that exercise, Wells Fargo has character assassinated me. They have told the people at Bank of America and elsewhere that I am a psychopath. They have almost certainly told members of congress some similar garbage. This necessitates that I defend myself. These character assassinations and disparaging me over my mental history has destroyed my life. I came to Charlotte to escape this, and this bank destroyed my new life and all the hopes that I could have had. What I wanted so badly to escape, they have amplified 10 million decibels. I am getting so pissed off that I can't type any more of this. I want there to be a hell for the people who did this to me to burn in. That is my ultimate wish. "I'm just guessing when I say that the bank won't have to disclose many details. I assume that this is how it works when things are "immaterial." - I don't know why I said this. I do the strangest things at times. I have read it before that immaterial amounts do not require a disclosure. The fact that my situation is an existential threat adds to this, however. I still don't know why I said this. There is something strange about me and how my behavior is regulated. It's like I get on a fixed track and I do not divert from it. I do this when I speak or type, at random times. It may be that I just didn't remember what I read on this one. But I will say things that I know are false on certain occasions. When this happens, it's like I can't control it. The part of me that knows that it is wrong cannot intervene with this fixed track that I am on. It happens very rarely, but I've noticed this about myself for quite some time. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I am in such torment. It makes me mad that it is so hard to die and that the United States of America has no assisted dying program. You used to could order euthanasia poison from china online. There was a factory in china that made it. That factory went out of business several years ago. I can't remember why but I read about it. If it were still in existence and I ordered some euthanasia poison, the thugs that work for the United States of America would seize my package and then they'd send somebody to my house. Their stated reason for this would be that what I did was "a violation of the law." The irony of this is not lost on me. It's also not something to laugh at in any remotes sense. The "law" is a load of horseshit that is touted to have something to do with being a fair society and a society where justice is served. This is a transparent lie. The law is about serving the interests of powerful individuals and institutions and is about giving law enforcement an excuse to ask the government for a budget. I'm very bad off and am saying things that are not kind and that I really don't mean Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

If something doesn't change, I'm not going to make it that much longer. The condition that I am in and that I have been in is a condition where I can't take much more hardship. And no, I don't need a therapist to give me a pep talk at my expense. I've already got one of those. The answer is also no for every other idea that Wells Fargo and the Justice Department come up with out of this characteristic compulsion to find someone else to be responsible for and to fix the consequences of Wells Fargo's actions. The $200 billion cash account bank that did this to me is the elephant in the room, and it needs to make this right with those same enormous resources. Instead, you torture a disabled man to death and watch this bank become a murderer in super slow motion. I have felt like I can't take any more for now a period of years. I've got a lot on my mind and I will never get around to a lot of it. On that note, I'll reassert that there are things the bank thinks that it has gotten away with that it has not. If they have gotten some stuff by me totally, it's not as much as they think. I think that it is very possible that I've nailed them on almost everything that they've done and that on the things where I haven't nailed them, I've got a sense of what is up or am once the fence but am leaning heavy towards the truth.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

"I was being a dick to you in these last 3 or 4 emails. I am sorry but it is literally something that I cannot help." - I was referring to those late night emails from the previous night. What happened is there was a snake in my room. A snake got in this apartment. The first day that I saw it, I got a broom and walked towards it, and it went into my room. The sheriff's deputy couldn't find it and left, after I called the sheriff's dept. So I had to sleep in my bed knowing that a snake is hiding somewhere in my room. What happens is I am a very very badly injured person and I am extremely handicapped. I am helpless for the most part and I cannot tolerate the least amount of hardship in life. I can't fight back and the world just pounds me with whatever it has. This was so distressing and so horrible to deal with, when I have this feeling of and this condition of being helpless, that it made me want to die. It triggered this reaction that I sometimes have, where I crave death as an addict craves a drug. The craving is so intense that I can sense the relief that death will give me and I will kind of have a pain for it. What consistently comes to mind when this happens is opiates. The reason for this is that the relief I sense comes from taking my last breath, and it's like I want to take something that will suffocate me. I crave it so badly. I have this terrible pain and I want to end it so badly. It's like

I would do anything if I could just get something that would kill me peacefully if I swallowed it. That's how I feel when this happens. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

You will have attended to this perpetual nightmare for years, for the sake of nothing. That's what I worry is a very likely outcome. Life gives you questions for which there is no good answer and it has did that to me and with this situation that we are in. I need to somehow get the willpower to make this a good thing and to have some kind of solution. It is so hard. I can't think of anything harder. I used to be such a beast and I still feel like a beast at times. For most of my life, I have seemed to not have much a sense of my limitations, maybe. I don't know. But it's an odd thing for me to want to do something and to doubt my ability to do it. My brain being broken is the big problem. That's what drives my handicap and my suffering and my constant uneasiness. I wish so bad that I could make something good of this. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

What helps me is adderall. I've done a bunch of research and it makes perfect sense that adderall would lessen my handicap. I'm working on getting my blood pressure down so that I can get my dose upped. Right now I'm on 30 mg, which is 10 mg less than my dosage at atrium. I need to get back to 40 at least and I really need 60. I think it will be hard to get up to 60. I don't think my provider will go above 40. Just maybe he will sometime way down the road. My brain has been severely weakened and my cognitive processing resources are impaired. I show every sign of having significant neurological damage. Among the most severely impaired are my working memory, executive function, and attention. I seem to be impaired across the board though. I need to talk to a neurologist. But with those 3 resources being impaired, it makes perfect sense that adderall would help me and reduce my handicap. This is coincidentally (or maybe not coincidentally) exactly what I have said, over and over, since may of 2019, after my symptoms had their first massive uptick. If you're wondering why I'm on 30 in the first place, my provider offered to go up to 40 many months ago, when we were adjusting my meds. At first we tried this non-stimulant that has a side effect of agitating bipolar disorder. I thought it would work the first day, but by day 2, I was having extremely uncomfortable symptoms. His philosophy and preference is to keep dosages as low as we can get away with, after considering risks and benefits, and I wanted to go along with him out of cooperation. He has helped me tremendously and so I wanted to work with him and to accomplish his goals too. I took a slight blow to my condition for his sake, and I was happy to do it. But now it's getting old being handicapped so much, and so I'm trying to get an extra improvement. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

It's also interesting to note that this other ADHD medication medicated my ptsd too. The fact that both stimulant and non stimulant adhd medications have a medicating effect on my ptsd and that they also reduce my handicap, what this indicates is that there is a common brain chemistry between ADHD and whatever brain damage that I have suffered. By brain damage, I am referring to changes in the structure and function of my brain and also to the damaged blood vessels or whatever the nature is of this neurological damage that I have suffered. The chance that I have not suffered neurological damage is much less than 1%. I show very clear signs of significant neurological damage. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Subject: Very relevant point about my behavior and what has happened

From: Leonard Clinton Williams III [REDACTED]@gmail.com>

To: "Division, Criminal (CRM)" <Criminal.Division@usdoj.gov>, civil.feedback@usdoj.gov

It's been a long time since I mentioned this, if I have at all. If I have, it was probably in early to mid 2021. I have this way of behaving that is extreme and that I'm sure confuses you. It would really help you if this behavior would go away. You most likely think that it has something to do with me. To be specific, I am referring to things where I'm in almost constant and never relenting distress, where I constantly complain that I want to die or that I'm mad that I can't die or that the best thing for me is to die, or where I speak of nonstop horrific suffering. Then I speak of extreme impairment, where I cannot do simple things like make a can of soup, and where even thinking of making a can of soup is extremely distressing. I talk about extreme emotional pain and hostility that results from what others would see as trivial provocations, and I tell you how I feel like that I have to massacre the person or persons who cause this feeling of extreme emotional pain. I say that for these and other reasons, I am a ruined human being. What has happened to me never leaves my mind for any increment of time greater than 90 seconds and 90 seconds is extremely rare. I would seem to have a quality where I am obsessed with this situation and my handicap, and it seems that it is impossible to get me to think about anything else, and I sure as hell can't forget about it. You are essentially 100% incorrect in thinking that it has something to do with me. What I mean here is that, if you (or me or anyone) got a top notch team of experts on traumatic stress disorders and the neurobiology and neuropsychology of traumatic stress disorders and the brain in general, and this team did a detailed interview of me and also did a protocol of brain scans, like an fMRI, a PET scan, and/or whatever else they find appropriate, they would come back with a conclusion that I am very severely injured. My behavior (like the behavior that I have described to you and that you have witnessed for years) would not be a surprise to them. It would make sense to them and they would tell you something to the effect of "this type of injury is something that will cause nonstop, very severe pain." They would most likely have some oversimplified explanation of the mechanics of the brain and what happens when things go wrong like they did with me, just like when you go to any doctor and they try to put it in words that you can understand, without you having to go to school for 10 or 20 years. Counter to what you would expect, if there was anything exceptional to note, it would be how well I have kept it together and how incredibly hard I have fought to stay above ground, even while dealing with the ungodly injury that I have incurred. They might wonder how the hell that I have done it. This is based on my understanding of what has happened to me, my symptoms, all of my knowledge of psychology and my other research, and my experiences in life. There are certain things that have consistently stuck out about me. One of them is how hard I am on myself and what a perfectionist that I am. Another is that I seem to be an unusually and quite extremely strong and resilient person. What I said here is completely accurate. If there is ever an opportunity to put it to the test, things will go essentially exactly as I have said that they will. There is something about my intuition that causes my perceptions to be extremely and even sometimes uncannily accurate. -- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

It's not an extra point. So this, and everything above it make up the example behaviors that I am referencing. All of this probably seems strange, confusing, and or hard to explain to you, and you probably think that it has something to do with me. The point of that email is that a competent team of experts would tell you that there is nothing surprising about my behavior and that it is attributable to the injury that I have suffered. It has nothing to do with me, except that they would likely make remarks about how well I've kept it together and how amazing it is that I am able to do anything at all. They'd also wonder what the hell is wrong with you that causes you to be so cruel, indecent, and immoral. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

My blood pressure is going down. I've been exercising every day. All I do is take a walk 2 or 3x a day. The road leading up to this apt is very steep. It will have me out of breath just walking up it one time. After I walk up it, I walk on the level ground that is up at the building or I come inside for a few minute, then I walk back down the road and up again. It is intense exercise, at least for me. I've got to get my diastolic blood pressure down, and I'm doing it. I have been taking propranolol for EPS, but for the longest time I didn't take my second dose in the evening. It is one of many things that I have trouble doing because of my impairment. My provider says that he can increase my Adderall if I get my blood pressure down. My Diastolic was at 89 last I got it checked in his facility. That number was artificially high, because I damn near had a heart attack 50x on the drive there. It is my startle response and my hypervigilance. It had me amped up. I just measured it and my diastolic is down in the low 70s. I think it is possible that I had an error with the arm band position, but if I didn't, this is a very good thing.-- Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I just checked it again. It was 113 over 80 even. 80 is stage 1 hypertension, just barely. I do think I can get the average way down. I think if I'm pegging below 80 consistently, I can get my dose upped. I don't think that he will go above 40 unless it is recommended by a neurologist. Possibly not even then. I really need 60, but I will be happy with whatever help he will give me. I hate being impaired. I used to be such a beast. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

Among the things that I've yet to tell you is that whoever it is who has told you that I have borderline personality disorder is dead wrong. Most likely this is a PhD with experience and competence, but they're wrong. I have just a tinge or maybe a tinge and a half or two tinges of cluster b traits, without considering the things I inherited from my father, but they're almost all under narcissism, and I don't remotely come close to meeting the bar for BPD. I can follow the thought process this person is using, but they're still off by a million miles. I have less traits of narcissism than what these online results give me too. When I take these tests, I answer the literal question, without adjusting for what is normal or what is normal for someone with my particular circumstances. There are some questions too that, on reflection, I'm answering completely wrong. You have to remember that narcissism is a universal quality that exists on a spectrum, and that until you get to the extreme end of that spectrum, it is a neutral quality. There is no opportunity to break your neck to make me out to be some bad person there. It's the same with this Robert Hare checklist. I have trouble scoring myself accurately because I don't have the manual. I also don't make adjustments for what is normal. For instance, the checklist has a trait called shallow emotional responses. I have had this, to some degree, for my whole life, but this changed when I developed PTSD and my emotions became more labile and less regulated. So what do you do here? 0 is nothing, 1 is sort of, 2 is I have this trait. As of the past 4 years, I am a 0. Before that I'm a 1 or quite possibly a 2, except you have to adjust for some things. The child abuse that I suffered from a young age and for years has the effect of deadening your emotions. This is visible on certain brain scans, and as I understand it, for abuse as severe as what I experienced, this deadening of your emotions is a universal effect. So here, what would seem to be appropriate would be to measure my shallow emotional responses relative to the emotional responses of people who have also experienced severe child abuse. Among those people, I would stick out as having somewhat more pronounced emotional responses. I think that is most likely the case, before my PTSD and obviously after. So it seems that I would be a hard and unquestionable 0 on this one. Other items have to be taken in context and amount to nothing. For example, juvenile delinquency and early behavior problems. For one, there is some connection to behavior problems and child abuse. I never have fully understood this and I don't have a whole lot of insight into how this happened with me, but I've had many, many psychologists tell me this. Even still, for these items, it is probably not appropriate to adjust for any adverse home environment, unless someone didn't have food to eat as a child and shoplifted grocery stores or something like this. So here I would seem to get a 2 and a 2. This is for bringing Tylenol to school and telling other kids it was a drug, and for being a generally mean and unruly kid for several years in middle and high school. I didn't tell the kids the Tylenol was a drug out of an attempt to make money, or anything like that. I was just being a little bastard. It's a far far cry from the crime of the century, but still was very wrong. The reasoning that you have to apply here, in the analysis, is who cares? I've lived as lawful a life as your typical person, quite possibly more so, for now over 22 years. Before that, I was on a steady upward trajectory, and to compensate for the mostly petty wrongs I have done, I have went out of my way to help people on many occasions. I am extremely kindhearted and like to help people. There isn't a single person that I have known in the past 2 decades who wouldn't feel comfortable leaving me alone with their wallet or their personal belongings. People correctly size me up as an unusually honest and trustworthy person, as it relates to telling the truth and as it relates to never, ever, ever even thinking about stealing from someone. I have stuck out as the hardest worker who works the longest hours and (most often) does the best job to every employer I've had since I was 15. I have done so most consistently and most dramatically since age 23. In light of all of this, who cares? Why should anyone give a shit that I committed a felony involving Tylenol at age 13, for no personal gain whatsoever. Why should it matter to anyone, in year 2003, or in year 2011, or in year 2017, that I did things like throw paper wads on the school bus when I was 11 years old. Doing an analysis like this is pointless. It's going back to stuff that happened in grade school and middle school for no reason whatsoever and with no possible benefit. It's a waste of time.

"Who on earth can defend crashing the whole world over anything, when you have the power to stop it. The answer to that last question is some substantial portion of every lawmaker in America, quite possibly a majority." -I said this in an earlier email and look at what is taking place. I now view the odds that we default on our debt as at least 50%. What in the hell are these people doing? The Republicans piss me off just a tiny bit more, but at the end of the day, I'm in a mood to just get rid of all of them. At Wells Fargo, nowhere near enough focus was placed on technical competence when making hiring and promotion decisions. It's the same for just about every other company. This adage "it's not what you know; it's who you know", goes around because it is reality. It's like a cancer that pervades nearly the entirety of America. People who know what they're doing make the world an objectively better place. I can't think of any reason to value anything else higher. You might have qualifications, like that the person is also ethical, but the goal of an employer ought to be to get the best, most talented and skilled employees on the market. It is the same for electing people for government. Lee Iacocca was one of the greats in business management. His philosophy- "I hire people who are smarter than me and get out of their way." Can you think of anything easier? How much effort does it take to have a bunch of talented people fix all your problems for you, on their own initiative. I am getting wearied of typing, but the cost of this is getting prohibitively high. People who don't know what they're doing screw up the world. Something has to be done to stop them. These dumbasses are going to do it. Everything we've built up for so long, as a civilization, will be put at risk and it's going to be bad. The economy is very hard to predict. It may even be impossible. What we have to do is get the broad strokes. Those are easier to understand, and the biggest and most apparent of these broad strokes is that it is extremely fragile. It's a never ending task keeping it from breaking. What these people want to do is to deliberately stress the system, and in a dramatic way. What will happen will be unpredictable, except that we can predict that it will be very, very, very bad. This banking crisis is already a challenge to our stability. We're on thin ice just because of that. And here they want to detonate some explosives because they're not getting their way. No one in their right mind would think of doing this. We're in for a nightmare and if we make it past this, if they raise the ceiling at the last minute, we cannot afford to forget this. This is our cue to overthrow our entire way of doing things. But we will forget. That's the sad thing and the problem. I mean we are just doomed. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm mean as hell now, it feels like. I used to be so kind and so forgiving to people I had conflict with or disagreements. I was just thinking of what I would say to the people who did this to me if I were in the same room with them and they had to answer for what they've done and hear what I have to say. I picture myself as being ruthlessly and relentlessly cruel and mean. They'd all cry and I'd probably say something so mean that it would scar poor little Jenny for life. Idk. I used to cry all of the time thinking about Jenny and what me and this situation put her through. This is after that I figured out Wells Fargo was behind it and after I figured out that Jenny for sure has some kind of deficit. It was especially after she told me that she cries herself to sleep over this. That was one of the last things she told me about this situation, right before she told me that she could no longer be my friend. It was a completely surprise. I knew nothing of this. I'd say I have cried at least 70 times thinking about Jenny. Probably closer to 100. But now it's like I'm so hostile and so destroyed that I'm just mean. I would not be able to resist telling her off and yelling at her and cursing and berating her. I picture myself as not even giving a shit if she breaks down crying right in front of me. That is the exact opposite of how I used to be. It rips my heart out to see people cry, especially poor little women like Jenny. But I mean I'm just mean. I am a ruined human being and I'm irreparably broken. The thing to do is to have me put to sleep in a peaceful and gentle way. Life does that to us. It gives us situation we can't fix and that we don't have a good answer for. I mourn for all the dreams that I used to have, about what my life could be. I have no idea what to do. I am extremely damaged. I need to find some way for this to be over for you, but I don't know how. I am such a massacred human being. I mean I am helpless and I'm all over the place. I could get a reporter started on my story with a week or 10 days, easily. I don't do that for a number of reasons, the big one being that I have a multipronged plan for when I get this in the media. I don't want to be in the public eye, but I am so incredibly damaged that it is going to cost a fortune for me to just be able to live. I will need people to help me with everything. I can't do anything for myself and never will be able to, except work on my computer and type on my iPhone and tablet and surf the internet on both of those. I can't clean to save my life and I will need to pay people to drive for me. All of this will be for the rest of my life. On top of that, I suffer so extremely that it will take a fortune to make it worth it for me to live. If I am to live, I need to be able to offset this suffering and have something. The best thing is for me to go overseas and die. That won't cost nearly as much. Every offer I've given is Pennies on the dollar but I don't want to set the bank back with a massive amount of money. I would feel bad about that, probably. I'm speaking here of my figure of $10 billion that I threw out. That would put them way behind. I don't know what to do. If my behavior is a mystery, pay for me a team of experts and pay for me all the brain scans that this team needs to evaluate me. There is something extraordinarily bad wrong with me. I am extremely ill and I don't think it's anything that could be considered normal. I may be a one of a kind example of the type of damage that I have suffered. Whatever it is, it is extreme. The experts could find the reason for why I suffer so bad and am so out of control. I do believe they would tell you that we are dealing with something extreme. I have thought about writing the people in Switzerland and asking them to accept me into their country, in exchange for the copyright to a book about my life and other things that I could write about. I just need to be comfortable and have as little hell and hardship as possible long enough to write a book about my life. It will defend my character and I have a story to tell. They could pay for my life and get it back when my book is published. And then that would be the end of my story. It sounds insane, probably, but this is quite a reasonable outcome when you consider the reality of what we face. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I try my best not to be woe is me to my little woman but I can't help it sometimes. I try to be tougher when I talk to her, but it's an act because I don't want to run her off. I lost control a little bit today and I'm going to freak her out. But it's a catch 22, because this is my reality. If she's ever going to be a regular part of my life, this is it. This is how it is to live with me. I am constantly suffering and I get mad when people speak to me a lot of the times, because when people speak to me at times that I have not planned, it causes me a lot of distress and gives me a helpless feeling. I do my appointments with my therapist on computer. Same with my medication provider. Their appointments are scheduled and I can get ready for them and it isn't too taxing. It would probably never occur to them that I get extremely distressed from people talking to me. But most of the time, I need people to leave me be and to not interfere with my day. If someone spontaneously talks to me, say asks me a question or starts talking about something about their day, it causes me terrible distress and it causes me to experience my handicap. I can feel the brokenness of my brain very intensely on a lot of the times that people do that. I become completely overloaded. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm going to have to break up with my little woman. We have some tiny problems here and there, and it's too much work for me. It takes energy and effort to be in a relationship like this and I'm just not able to do it. I saw it coming that my handicap would get in the way. Any romantic relationship that I'm in sort of has to be all about me, except for the money that I provide. This is because of my handicap and the limitations it imposes. A woman who is with me would have to put her normal emotions and inclinations aside constantly. It would be repeated sacrifices the whole time that she is with me. It's not really realistic for me to have a relationship. By design, all I will ever get for any long period of time is some woman who uses me for my money. That's because that's all that I have to offer. I can't go anywhere. I have to avoid people because of my condition. I have a list of limitations like this. Any woman who lives with me would not be allowed to ever get angry with me. This is an unreasonable requirement. It's not like they have a choice. It's just not doable for me to have a relationship in this condition. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I deserve $10 billion for what has been done to me. I also deserve to have every one of these people punished for what they've done. Jenny's police officer neighbor is facing life in prison for a deprivation of rights under color of law that involves a kidnapping. He ought to be prosecuted. Allie Roe is facing 10+ years in prison. She ought to be prosecuted. So should the rest of her social worker friends who participated in this. There are several people at atrium who are facing 20 to 800+ years, for their repeated and unending HIPAA violations, involving illegal contact with Jenny, illegal contact with my mother, and repeatedly sharing my health information with Wells Fargo and anyone else who asks for it (or in the case of Wells Fargo, they proactively deliver it to them). The worst crime spree in the history of American business has the offenders coming out real good. Some of them have a debt free home, and there are others who probably have more. <https://twitter.com/thehill/status/1662633822125473793?s=46&t=Clrz4M-ovXxMaXNk-8B8zw> I am suffering like hell but thank god this debt ceiling hell is over. I don't think we have enough lunatics in either house of congress for this not to go through. I got in a mix up on Jan 1st, 2010 and got arrested. I had to go to court almost every month for 14 months before it got dismissed. Before every court session, the bailiff would give the instructions on how things were to proceed and what to do and what not to do. He would always end it with "May God save this state." Even as a nonbeliever, this struck a cord. It resonated with me, as I sat in my own misfortune and looked around the courtroom at all the people who were going to take a painful blow in their life over whatever foolish thing they had done. It's like you see all this suffering and all of this hardship and all of this dysfunction and hell, and what immediately sticks out as how completely unnecessary all of it is. If you ask an 18 year old young man who lives in this country what his goals are and he says "one day I'm going to have an 80,000 square ft mansion and a 747 with a landing strip in my front yard", you can laugh all you want, but you can't exactly tell him he's wrong. We live in a place that is so full of opportunity that it's not completely off the table that he has all of that one day. There are not many places like that and there have not been many in the history of the earth either. Think of the young soldier who promises his young wife and his 2 year old daughter that he will make it back to them, and then isn't able to keep that promise. Multiply that by some figure in the 10s of millions and you will have some sense of the incredible price that has been paid for us to have this opportunity, and this is what people make of it. How can there be any hope for us, who make so little out of so much? So it's like, God, come and save us; for it is obvious that we will never save ourselves. I don't know how for this situation to be over when I suffer every single day and when I need a very large amount of money just to be able to live. I will need to pay people to cook and clean for me for the rest of my life. I will also need to pay people to drive me places. I will need to pay people to shave my face and my hair. I will need to buy a very big house to live in. When it deteriorates, I will need to buy another one. I don't need a mansion, not exactly. It depends on your standards for what that word means. I just need a house where every room is very large. This will allow the furniture to be spread out with big distances between everything. Constricted spaces and clutter tax and paralyze my mind and make my impairment worse. Then I will need to buy a car every 3 to 5 years, even though I won't be driving myself places much. If I have a woman, which seems to be something that isn't doable, she will want me to take care of her, so I will have to buy her nice things and make a life for her. My little woman from the Philippines is going to want a bunch of kids, if we stay together. I already see that coming. I doubt that I will do that. I do not like the idea of having kids because I care about kids more than anything and I cannot bear the thought of letting my children suffer. What this means in practical terms is that if I have children, I will be tethered to living. At all times, I will have no choice but to live, no matter how much I suffer, for the sake of my children. It is a horrifying thing, to think of how life could get and me not have an option out of it. But if any woman does talk me into this, I will have to take care of my children, and I cannot make a can of soup. The bottom line is that pretty much all I will have in life is what is given to me, and it's obvious who ought to do the giving- the people who did this to me. This is the bare minimum, and doesn't factor in that I need to offset this suffering. My brain has been damaged and it causes terrible suffering. It makes life not worth living. It makes me crave death constantly. Even in the extreme case, where I get the most I have asked for or more, I will find it hard to find the will to live for a good part of the time. I am in a position now, where I am very worried about our country. At the same time I need justice. I am also concerned for the justice department and how this situation is probably causing you all kinds of stress and frustration. I worry about Wells Fargo too, at least at times. I do want Wells Fargo to fix its business. I would hate to see that not happen and I don't want to cripple them to the point that they can't do that. For my own sake, I am absolutely horrified, at least

most of the time, about the prospects of me becoming widely known, which is exactly where this is going on the current route that I'm on. I don't know what else to do but to continue my fight. Im at a loss for other options. What has been done to me is terrible. I'll add that I've got enough to knock the living hell out of this bank, and by the time it is said and done, I just might do it. It will require me to be widely known, which is my worst nightmare and is especially my worst nightmare in the condition that I am in. If I do that, I'll ask the world to have mercy on the bank, after the bank makes it right for me. This assumes that the world cares, which I think a lot of it will. The story I have to tell is the story of a very kindhearted person who worked very hard his whole life and who was then massacred in a very cruel fashion, over absolutely nothing. It's actually even more than that, too. There are profound lessons to be learned from the story that I have to tell, for individuals and also for societies around the world. You will see what I mean if it comes to that. I will get more than my 15 minutes of fame, and my life will be even more over than it already is. I will have accomplished something, however, and that will be satisfying. I'm going to be thinking about what the hell I'm going to do. This situation is not what I did. It is what they did. Their actions created this. It will take me at least another month to get everything ready for the media, before I go to whatever reporter I'm going to use. I've got 2 from WSJ, 1 from NYT, 1 from Bloomberg News, 1 from LA Times, and I'd have to think of who else I've talked to. Washington Post had assigned me a reporter at one time, then it fizzled out. These are people who I have their number and/or email, and have talked to, and who recognize me. I've got other TV networks, magazines, and things of this sort where someone has responded to me but I don't know their name. I had CNBC on the line for several days a while back, but then my explanations of how I figure stuff out got too far out there. At least that's what I think happened. for whatever reason, they no longer respond but it appears that my emails to them do get read (I put links that I can track in them, and someone/something clicks them). They stopped responding to my signal chat and then eventually their signal line was terminated or something. NBC news appears to have a bot and/or some people who don't get paid much reading their tips. They read everything that I send them, but I had a friend test them out by sending a "news tip" that was just a single period, and as soon as they came online the next time, they read her message, not long after they read mine (I can get a timestamp on the read receipts). The month timeline is overly ambitious and extremely not likely to happen. I think it is more likely to be 3 to 4 months. That assumes I don't change course at some point. I'm a wreck and I need something out of this fight and I just keep on the same track that I'm on, in terms of my day to day life. It's a constant battle to escape feelings of torment, and what makes me feel better is to get something done and in particular to do something that advances my fight. But I'll be thinking and hopefully we can find a way out of this that minimizes the hell for all involved. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

" I'll add that I've got enough to knock the living hell out of this bank, and by the time it is said and done, I just might do it."-this is what they freaking deserve. Look at what they've done. Discount everything that I say. I am so destroyed, such a wreck, and such a firecracker, and my thoughts and feelings are all over the place and not consistent. What is not to be discounted are my statements about my condition and my fight. Also not to be discounted is my chances for getting this in the media. What I mean here is that I am very consistent in moving ahead with my fight, for the reasons that I gave you (I have to get something out of it, I don't know what else to do, it alleviates my torment, etc.). I also have a very clear and consistent perception about my chances of getting this in the media. That never changes. I could be wrong, but I doubt it, and this is consistent. I have talked to a lot of media people and I've got it figured out exactly what I need to do. I also consistently worry about the country and the justice department, but what am I worried about? What I'm worried about is the predictable consequences of Wells Fargo's conduct. Why is this not Wells Fargo's problem? I'm very sorry. I know this is hell for you. It is obviously not fun for me either. I will be thinking of what the hell to do, but at the same time I am likely to continue on the only path I know how to be on, and I'm not sure what will happen in the end. I try my best but I'm only human and I'm all over the place. They did this. I am very sorry. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

It seems like my little woman is happier with me than I thought. I said that we were having problems, but it appears to possibly be all in my head. She's such a sweetheart. If she moves here, I worry that she will get stolen from me. She's young and likes to do young people stuff like go to clubs and dance. I won't be able to do that, due to my condition and the need for me to not be around people. I hate this suffering and it bothers me how the other side doesn't seem to be interested in the truth. You've changed somewhat, it seems, although I cannot tell if this is another bluff or tactic. Still yet, you seem to be in a mentality of wanting to dodge the consequences of your actions and not really caring if your actions are what has caused me such damage (and they for sure are). It's not consistent with an ethos of wanting to "do the right thing." I hate this situation so bad. I hate what has been done to me. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I'm also very tormented and have a lot of trouble getting anything productive done. I think about dying more now too. It seems like dying is my best option. I feel like I am dying from being treated as if I do not matter. I am extremely ill; I am severely damaged, and I am in a very fragile state. What I need is for people to be kind to me and to recognize how much I suffer and what a terrible set of wrongs that I have been done. Why should I count on this?
Why should I believe that this is remotely likely to happen, when I come forward with what has been done? I look out into the world, and particularly at our government, and it's just insane. People ignore reality at will and are capable of the most ruthless cruelty as a result. I will have every talking head loudmouth, every keyboard warrior, every tin foil hat YouTuber channel, every politician, every you name it, taking the most ridiculous shots at me and hitting me with every accusation under the sun. The pain of being treated as if I do not matter has become so great that I do not wish to take any more of it at any cost, and I would far prefer to die. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I need to delete my emails. I have almost 29,000 unread emails on this email account. It causes my sent emails to take forever to send, unless they are short. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

What the hell to make of my little woman though? I've never been so genuinely confused by someone's behavior in my life. I am leaning far towards that she is just too busy. She's a workaholic because she lives in a poor country and her family has to do without. She has big goals for her family, about wanting her siblings to go to school and stuff like this. When I first met her, she was already working 7 days a week. She probably hasn't had more than 2 or 3 days off in the past 2 years. And now what I'm noticing is she's getting up at 3 in the morning to do work, after she goes to bed at 11 pm or later- the above is a message I sent a friend in a conversation earlier. Sometimes I can't figure people out. Usually I am being gaslighted. I think that would be the case if I compiled examples and looked into them. I am very susceptible to being emotionally manipulated. That's what I've found over the years. My dad played mind games with me for over 8 years. He did this over and over, and it never worked. Most often I would know exactly what he was doing, as soon as he does it. I would know his exact thought process, in real time. I'd be thinking what he's up to and what he's thinking, to myself, as he is talking. There were other times that I'd have to guess at his end game, but I still knew roughly what he's up to. In those instances, it's possible that he had no end game for me to sense. He's just moving ahead one step at a time. He can decide his next move when he gets there. When he got sick though and switched to emotional manipulation, he pulled my heart strings with ease. It was like having a relationship with him was not much else than torture. That's how I started to feel. His manipulation attempts for that first 8 years got him nowhere, but it ripped me to pieces that my own father would do this to me. It hurt worse and worse as time went on. Then all of the sudden, when I've already had more than I can take, he's deathly ill and he turns it up 1,000 notches. God what murder it was. I got off on a tangent, but I'm sad about my little woman. I'm not cut out for conflicts and misunderstandings like this, not in my condition. People do not understand how severely damaged I am. Every day that I'm alive is another miracle and I suffer more than 99.9% of people can begin to imagine. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I have such terrible pain, and being in the public eye will make things 500x worse. I don't want people to know a thing about me or to know who I am. I want to be unknown and unheard of, in every place except the city that I live in. I have experienced total destruction that will be complete once I'm in the public eye. There is nothing that will make things okay again. It can be made better but not good in the way it would have been had this never happened. I know that this is hell on you and I'm sorry that it is. I didn't do this. It's far worse for me; I promise. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]

I had a typo. It seems to me that this neurological damage causes me to have more typos, but just maybe I am wrong. I meant to say "before this ever happened." This situation will never be over for me. There is no such thing. I am permanently damaged. I need to think of some way for it to be over for everyone else. This might involve this whole thing being put in the news. That's about the only way I know to advance my fight. I get extremely mad when I think of all that's been done to me by so many people. Part of me wants these people to pay. That's a big driver for getting this publicly exposed. Whatever hell I have to incur as a result, on and off, seems worth it. Another big driver is that I am scared. Then the last big driver is I need a large amount of money. Those aren't necessarily in order. Warmest Regards, Clint Williams (980)-[REDACTED]
